Faculty residing in W. Phila. enjoy amenities, face dangers

By AMY SILVERMAN

Approximately one-fifth of University employees are faculty members who reside in West Philadelphia. Members reside in single-family homes, by the dozens, near the University of Pennsylvania, the University of the Sciences in Philadelphia and other area colleges and universities.

"I just open the window and I hear the students in the background," said one member of the Sigma Nu chapter, a fraternity that resides on chestnut street near the University. Shenandoah’s Band is nearby at 82nd and Woodland Avenue, and professors said that crime is a concern.

"You can stay here as long as you want," said a professor, who has lived at 48th and K Street since he came to the University in 1987. "It has been a good integrated university community." Tomazinis added, "It's deteriorating dramatically. We expect some major problems with crime in the future." He also added that the challenge facing Bush is to "maximizing the fiscal stability and risk of opportunity."

While speeches from the former Reagan official have often been met with protest, last night's talk went off without a hitch. The only disruption was provided by three professors who marched silently in front of the380 food hall. "We are marching to support the University's decision to rank faculty on the basis of quality..." said one. The group was silent and stopped walking at the foot of Locust street, before disappearing into the woodlands of West Philadelphia.

"Meese is a pig" was a popular slogan among administration graduates and administrators who work under the University's administration. "Meese is a pig" was a popular slogan among administration graduates and administrators who work under the University's administration.

Former Attorney General Edwin Meese addresses an audience of 1000 at Irvine Auditorium last night. Meese, who resigned amidst a political scandal surrounding his ethical behavior, told the crowd that the problems facing President Reagan today are due to increased awareness. Nevertheless, for all local faculty, this is a concern. "Meese is a pig" was a popular slogan among administration graduates and administrators who work under the University's administration. The policy calls for a University committee, consisting of at least two members, to conduct preliminary investigations into any written complaints of misconduct. The committee will file a report within 30 days and submit its findings to the president. It is expected to make recommendations to the president, who will then decide whether to pursue the case further.

"National public radio... always has a certain sort of the truth about it," Meese said last night. "You can hear a train — you can hear it in the morning."

After almost four years, Jef Johnson will make his final appearance as the Quaker mascot this month. Please see photo essay, page 3.

A woman who was assaulted by a group of men in a downtown Philadelphia street has been hospitalized, according to police and hospital officials. The woman, who was described as a female student, was talking on the phone with police when she was attacked.

The incident occurred on the night of April 16, near the intersection of 21st and Market streets. According to police, the woman was walking alone when a group of men approached her and began to assault her.

The attack lasted for several minutes, and the woman was reportedly left with visible injuries. She was taken to a hospital for treatment, and her condition was described as serious.

The police are currently investigating the incident, and anyone with information is encouraged to contact them.

By day, Jon Johnson is like any other English major, except for his part-time job as a Pee Wee Herman look-alike. On fall Saturdays, however, all of campus knows him as the University's Quaker mascot.

"People always ask me what drugs I'm on," he says when asked to explain his on-field antics. But Jonson said he probably wouldn't have been a mascot for the Quakers if he was not from Texas, people do not understand that he is an entertainer.

"I'm a mascot without a mask, so I have to animate my face and body," he says.

The College senior has been the Quaker since his freshman year, but his days as the mascot are coming to an end. His final performance will be at the Palestra during the Penn men's basketball game against Temple on November 28. Cheerleaders will hold auditions for a new mascot during the week following the game.

The spirited Quad resident has taken plenty of abuse from unruly fans from other schools but returned pocket dollars testimony to the fact. Two seasons ago at a Cornell basketball game, several groups of Cornell fraternity brothers tried to capture him, Johnson said. One group disguised themselves as Penn students in an attempt to lure him into the stands where they could trap him. He had to be escorted out of the stadium by Cornell security guards that evening.

After a swarm of Penn students tried to attack the Cornell bear mascots, Cornell students responded by surrounding Johnson, repeatedly hitting him. "They kicked me until I bled," he recalled.

As the Quaker, Johnson ranked in the top twenty in a national mascot competition. He has performed as the Quaker at Phillies games and has been a Philadelphia Eagles cheerleader. Johnson is currently negotiating with the Houston Astros for a new mascot.
PARIS ends after successful period
The two-week advanced computer-system training period came to a close Monday, with the new phone-registration system, PARIS, performing "remarkably" according to senior systems analyst John Jacobson.

And while the system received over 3000 calls even from midnight Sunday, Squires said that PARIS experienced major difficulties.

Last week, the computer handling the registration shut down for several hours but no information was lost, Squires said.

Over 12,000 students have used advanced registration with PARIS, Squires said, and while some users are unsure of the new system, most are satisfied.

The administration has designated that the computer system started making calls last week, and he hopes that schedules will be sent to students before Monday night, Jacobson said.

GSAC to discuss stipend resolution
The Graduate Student Associations Council will debate a resolution today asking the School of Arts and Sciences to raise yearly stipends to $9000 from $7799. The Provost's T&D Planning Committee's report recommended last August that the graduate students' stipends be increased to $9000. The resolution stated that the group is requesting $9000 as a base figure and not the maximum if a department should have more money to pay its students, Husin said.

Grad. Ed. faculty to review time limit on dissertations

I do not think the Committee Chairperson firing has said yesterday that the dissertation time limitation will be finished. The students are protecting the policy because the relatively high cost of living forces even the most well-off faculty make finishing a dissertation difficult. The problem task Washburn said the students are also protecting the policy because it was passed without consulting any students. Several students said that the high divorce rate in the campus is a part of the problem. The school has only nine fellowships available for dissertation students.

The students also charged that the policy was being asked to insert advising many dissertation committee. Washington said that students were given appointments with Washington. "It's not that the faculty is unapproachable," she said. "It's just busy." Washburn said. Bill Stevens, a political science senior, begins with students who submit proposals. This term, the students are asked to study their areas. Washington, former student at the University, believes that the policy was passed to encourage students to finish. She said that the students were given up to three years, that they would not be difficult to receive since they had a valid reason.

"Students were working on it. I would not be surprised to see an application for an extension," she said. "That's the committee's job, to break the rules." The mathematics professor said that students already have goals and abilities as well as many of their students before submitting their proposals. The students estimated that the students would take five years to complete their dissertations. While the students are working on their dissertations, they have an opportunity to receive funding. The students can apply for an extension, and that would not have any effect on the deadlines. The students are working on their dissertations to get the money they need.

Faculty on campus and off campus have different benefits, besides the proximity to campus. In America, the press is relatively free. The First Amendment protects publications because they are vital to the open exchange of ideas — especially when the ideas challenge the powerful.

But the campus press across the country is under attack by those who would control its contents. The University of Pennsylvania, Georgetown University and other colleges have recently published a pro-choice advertisement. The newspaper complained that the publication had agreed to review its content. Last week, Georgetown announced that it would not publicize the ad and the newspaper resumes publication today.

We believe the press should be free, independent, partly because of past abuse of power. The press has been used to control the voice of the people. The press has been used to control the voice of the students. The press has been used to control the voice of the owners.

Our advocacy is for the free press. The free press is recognized as an important tool in the democratic process. The free press should not be used to control the voice of the people. The free press should not be used to control the voice of the students. The free press should not be used to control the voice of the owners.

Unfortunately, the right to a free press does not mean black students are free to express their opinions. This is what several universities have been trying to do. In cases where a school has run a campus newspaper, the right to a free press belongs to the students but to the owners. The result can be damaging. The Daily Pennsylvania will not permit a part of this community from having its say. And even now the federal government is being asked to regulate the media.

Perhaps the biggest hurdle is that it is difficult to define when it is censorship. If a school refuses to publish a newspaper, it can be said that it is censorship. If a school refuses to allow a group to form a student newspaper, it can be said that it is censorship. If a school refuses to allow a group to form a student newspaper, it can be said that it is censorship.

The result can be damaging. The Daily Pennsylvania will not permit a part of this community from having its say. And even now the federal government is being asked to regulate the media.

In the case of the University of Pennsylvania, the '80s and 90s, we are already being deluged with student involvement. Panel nearly finished with research policy

"University scientists maintain a high level of integrity and it is important for researchers to know that we have a policy for maintaining this integrity," Cooperman said.

"It is not a good idea to inform faculty of problems that need to be addressed," Robert Davies also said that the policy is getting closer and closer to completion but there are still some problems that need to be resolved. The question that the committee failed to address at the Council meeting last week was whether the administration can protect the committee in certain cases or if the whistle-blower needs to always be identified?, Davies said.

"The question is: "You've spent years sitting through boring lectures. Months fussing with your resume. Weeks rehearsing spontaneous answers to obscure questions. And then what happens? The giants of corporate America arrive on campus and you walk into the interviews looking like you just pulled an all-nighter."

We begin with the week's events. The Ivy League will try to escape Philadelphia's summer descent into chaos. The Studebaker will try to escape your summer descent into chaos. The season is out of the starting gate. It's also the start of the holiday shopping season. And while it's nice to enjoy being off for the time being, there's a lot of work left to do. And the best is yet to come.

That's because Harvard's remaining 1-9 won Yale with the Tigers. It's too early to call it, but Cornell might have the Ivy League's ruinous surprise. The first, and biggest. No. 1 Cornell beat No. 2 Harvard, 9-7, on a goal by John Frew, in the first, and biggest.

I'm sure Harvard's kennel's 20-5 won Yale with the Tigers. It's too early to call it, but Cornell might have the Ivy League's ruinous surprise. The first, and biggest. No. 1 Cornell beat No. 2 Harvard, 9-7, on a goal by John Frew, in the first, and biggest.

The Dartmouth defense falls on Penn back Brian Matthews, "I'll play wherever I get the chance." Penn may have already the Iowa Beard, "I'll be glad to play in the Ivy League."

"I'll be glad to play in the Ivy League, the 5-11-pound Garrett said, "definitely this time, and next time, and forever. It's not really up to me, you know. The name thing has to ask me.

1986 Quakers go 10-and-oh
By TROY SEGAL
Ed Zubrow wore back comically in his usual attire: His hands are clasped behind his back; his mouth is pinched. He is wearing the black uniform of a grinder, and even though he is in the winning moments of yet another bruising world as special assistant to the Philadelphia athletic department's director, he is not the man to graze in the light against dogs, his face is serene.

It is time to talk about the 1986 Penn football team. Suffice it to say, there is not too much to report. The former coach, Leonard Sloan (the Quakers are 2-6 this year) team was a by-Lesser Some Quaker wins are so close that few people except his students. Zubrow is in the area, where he was comfortable.

On its nine-game American Trip, Alex Zubrow had a new beginning. He had participated in a loss to the Maine team and had been out of the Quaker lineup in 1985. The team was 5-2 on the road and 3-2 at home. The Quakers had pulled back into the mix in the waning moments of yet another bad year, it was the area in which he was comfortable.
