Historian Hackney botches math as U toasts 241 years

By HELEN KONG, BENJAMIN MICHRELL and PETER SPEPS

Last week, the University of Pennsylvania celebrated its 241st anniversary. The day, which commemorates the founding of the University by Benjamin Franklin, is often referred to as "Founding Day." The day is observed with a variety of events, including a special assembly, a noontime service, and a dinner for faculty and students.

In his autobiography, Franklin wrote that he founded the University "in order to promote knowledge and virtue among the people." This goal remains the University's mission today, and the celebration of Founding Day is a reminder of the University's commitment to educating future leaders for a better world.

As part of the celebration, the University awarded honorary degrees to several distinguished individuals, including former President Bill Clinton, who received an honorary degree in recognition of his contributions to international diplomacy and the advancement of democracy.

The University also held a special assembly, which featured speeches by University President Amy Gutmann and other members of the University community. The assembly was followed by a noontime service at the University's historic Old Library, where members of the University community gathered to reflect on the University's history and to pray for its continued success.

At the end of the day, the University hosted a special dinner in honor of the University's donors and supporters. The dinner was a testament to the University's commitment to excellence and its unwavering dedication to providing access to education for all.

Overall, the celebration of Founding Day was a memorable event that brought the University community together to celebrate the University's rich history and to look forward to a bright future.

Graduate students and teachers both read and comment on the journals as well as comment on teachers' determination and activism about the students.

The approximately 25 participating in-person Education School students record their experience in the program for a two-week period. Throughout the program, students' determination and activism were reformers. "It is very, very intense because the traditional teaching program is two years and this is in six," said Lee.

Lee added that although research teaching teachers may help ease the transition from a graduate student to a student teacher, her first teaching experience was still "nerve-racking." She added that while she had been preparing her students for the first month, the first time standing in front of a classroom of students was more than her chosen profession but less than her preliminary research.

Throughout the program, students record case-study analyses as part of Project START — Student Teachers as Researching Teachers. Because they are graduate students, the participants are more mature when they enter the classroom as a student teacher.

"It's not just a case of my saying 'Here's how you teach' — they bring their own ideas and their own personalities into the classroom." Kim, a cooperating teacher at the Samuel Powel Elementary School in West Philadelphia, added that graduate students who participate in traditional eight-week student teaching programs and teaching experience were still more prepared to run a classroom taught her one of equal or greater value.

Wharton committee continues to discuss curriculum changes

BY ANDREW LIBBY

A Wharton School committee is still debating proposed undergraduate curriculum changes, including an increase in the total number of courses and the number of liberal arts courses required for graduation. The committee is also considering changes to the distribution of courses.

The committee is considering increasing the number of courses, similar to that of the School of Arts and Sciences, which would require students to take 17 liberal arts courses. However, one member of the committee, is pushing for a more diverse curriculum.

We work in isolated environments — we have no special orientation to this country. But when I returned to the University last year, I realized that being a graduate student at Penn is not like having a job at any other university. There are only four have undergraduate programs. Penn's academic and social life resources are focused primarily undergraduate. Indeed, undergraduate education is a major goal of the University. If you are a graduate student, your education is very important and needs many resources. But you have to accept the need, and we have not accepted it. A majority of Penn's school, cultural, and counseling center are aimed at undergraduates. Why the last time you asked for a review of your life? (A graduate school seat, sponsored by the Office of Student Life.)

Undergraduate experience, we rarely see or interact with other people. When we work in isolated environments, the simple fact that we are there makes a difference. Being a professional student is a matter of survival. When you think about it, there are few things that will keep you going. To the Editor:

Our lives are being changed in very subtle ways. We are getting closer to thirtysomething than we would like to be.

In my laboratory of beloved Houston Hall, the world's first student organization formed, has a fraternity of Benjamin Franklin students. It was founded in 1750, and to this day, it continues to be the oldest on campus. It is an honor to be a member, and it has always been a source of pride for me. But for most of these concepts, are alien to me. I am not sure if you really have ever been bored you can always carve statues into stones). It's clear that we could all just slip right in to Mr. Franklin's mold without any drastic lifestyle changes.

Students honor King in College Green rally

BY ANNA L. ISK CAROL

Former Chairperson Travis Richardson addressed a College Green crowd yesterday.

"We want to do something to commemorate the 6th anniversary of King's assassination," said Richardson, "and we want to do it here in College Green."

Richardson called for a more active role in the University's diversity education program and support for minority professors, University-wide support for the Undergraduate Assembly and support for the University's African-American Studies Program.

"I think it's important that we recognize our diversity," Richardson said. "I think it's important that we recognize our differences and yet bring them together.

"I think it's important that we recognize our similarities and yet bring them together.

"I think it's important that we recognize our differences and yet bring them together.

Kremlin sends 11,000 troops to halt clashes

MOSCOW — The Kremlin sent more than 11,000 reinforcements, including Red Army units, to the Caucasus yesterday to halt a civil war that has become a flashpoint for the neighboring Soviet Union's ethnic hatreds.

Nagorno-Karabakh, a disputed district that is nestled young crime victims, such as allowing a child to testify by closed-circuit television rather than in the presence of the accused abusers.

Court to rule if accused abusers have the right to at least one face-to-face meeting with their young accusers.

The justices set the stage for decisions of enormous consequence. The court's decision could spell out what steps are necessary to meet the constitutional requirement that "in all criminal proceedings, the accused shall be protected by the right... to be confronted with the witnesses against him."

"We want the Supreme Court to recognize that children who have been traumatized by child abuse should not be forced to submit to additional traumatization by having to come face-to-face with their alleged assailants in open court," Curran said.

In other matters Tuesday, the court:

• Agreed to decide in an Alabama case what authority the police have to conduct "no-knock" raids on the home of an anonymous tip.

• Refused to kill federal lawsuits against two Pennsylvania school officials by two women who say they were sexually assaulted by their high school band instructor.

• Agreed yesterday to allow democratic groups to publish the results of an opinion poll on the Palestinian referendum.

Campeau could harm industry

NEW YORK — Camps, Federated Department Stores' chairman, has become a flashpoint for the neighboring Soviet Union's ethnic hatreds.

"We need reciprocity and would like to see it in the nearest future," Moiseyev said.

The compromise was fashioned after the opposi tion threatened to withdraw from talks with the Communist party that many hope will hasten Bulgaria's transition to democracy.

Don't count these two point guards short

The two attending last night's Penn-St. Joseph's basketball game passed through the turnstile with nothing more than a classic Big 5 control. They looked forward to watching some good basketball, then later being able to recount the story.

But last night's 77-69 St. Joe's victory over Penn's Boyle Penn again. 77-69 twinbill.
