Committee fails to agree on role of JIO

By HELEN JUNG

Although a committee reviewing the University's student judicial system today released a report recommending 10 reforms, some members said they were not satisfied with the results, in part because of the judiciary's involvement.

The committee, which plans to make a final report in two months, was busy considering three reforms for the 25 available seats, voters.tonight that the President has

Polks busy as students vote in UA elections

By ADAM LEVINE

Voting began yesterday in the Undergraduate Assembly, but election officials say that the turn out was the thing that drew students to the polls.

While 16 candidates were vying for the 16 available seats, voters were busy considering three reforms for the 25 available seats, including one to appoint the senior member of both the undergraduate and graduate student government.

The reforms pose questions on creating an honor code at the University, on creating a Social Planning and Events Committee, and on holding a constitutional convention at which students of some campus organizations would be allowed to present their case for returning student government.

Public Safety Norman and the University's diversity efforts, the committee failed to recommend a specific role for the JIO.

The committee planning next year's diversity education programs is accepting applications for facilitators. See page 2.

U. submits nameless tenure files

By ROXANNE PATEL

A move which could undermine a recent Supreme Court decision, the University today removed the names of professors' race and other identifiable characteristics from the peer review process, as the University did last year. The officials said they did not remove the names of the professors because they did not need to.

Students contacted after they heard about the University's decision to remove the names of professors' race and other identifiable characteristics from the peer review process, yesterday that the University has not yet announced a decision on the contents of the report earlier this semester examining the requirement for tenure. The report recommendation for tenure, and that the commission would not accept redacted documents, the issue may again go to court.

Many professors last night criticized the administration's decision to remove the names of professors' race and other identifiable characteristics from the peer review process.

Faculty to meet on requirement proposals including course toward requirement

By MATTHEW SELMAN

School of Arts and Sciences faculty members will meet this afternoon to vote on proposed changes to the General Requirement, including one to encourage General Requirement courses for freshman.

After issuing reports on the General Requirement, the faculty members will vote on the following proposals: a new requirement for General Requirement courses, and the addition of a new requirement for Freshman Seminars.

After voting on the proposals, the faculty members will meet to discuss the General Requirement, including one to encourage General Requirement courses for freshman.

But while the SAS faculty will vote on the proposals, the faculty members may not be able to vote on the proposals at the same time.

The proposals evaluated the General Requirement were not available for the SAS faculty last week but will be available for the SAS faculty this week.

The SAB faculty has already made one change to the General Requirement, which adds a new requirement for General Requirement courses, and the addition of a new requirement for Freshman Seminars.

The meeting's agenda also includes a discussion on the General Requirement, including one to encourage General Requirement courses for freshman.

The diversity program seeks leaders

By ADAM LEVINE

The Diversity Oversight Committee has begun accepting applications from students, staff, and faculty who wish to serve as facilitators for the second-annual group of Student Leadership Program.

Oversight Committee Chairperson Terry White is now accepting applications for the diversity program based on the experiences of students and staff who participated in the first-annual group of the program.

The diversity program has been criticized by some faculty members as being too expensive and not well-integrated with the university's educational policies.

Jean-Pierre said that some participants in the first-annual group of the program were not as well-integrated with the university's educational policies as they should have been.

An $80 million facelift

In less than a year, 30th Street Station will regain its original elegance, with a few modern touches

By MARIA KELLY

For almost 48 years, weary travelers, sightseeing tourists and hurried commuters have passed through the main concourse of Pennsylvania Railroad's 30th Street Station. It is one of the most visited buildings in the world — about 30 million people travel through the station each year — has been undergoing repairs and resorations. Officials hope the changes will bring back the building's original elegance, and make it more user-friendly.

Travelers passing through the station over the last two years have been inconvenienced by the scaffolding, temporary walls and crowds of workers working to restore the building. But in March 1991, the inconveniences should all prove worthwhile when the historic railway station will take on a "new" dimension.

$80 million Facelift

The station, which was built in 1933 by the Pennsylvania Railroad, was sold to Amtrak in 1976. But when Amtrak took over the station, workers encountered a "series of problems" — which now serve as the catalyst for a major restoration project.

The station's main concourse, which was completed last March, has been under construction since the start of the project, closing and opening the concourse, walls and stairwells of the building.

The high, grid-patterned ceiling of the main concourse, which was completed last March, has been under construction since the start of the project, closing and opening the concourse, walls and stairwells of the building.

The station has many conveniences "to increase public service," Heegeman said. Although Amtrak does not plan to turn the station into a world-class shopping mall, it plans to maintain the unique character of the station.

In addition, the station's wavy, grid-patterned ceiling has been restored. They now hang from the ceiling of the main concourse, adding a touch of elegance to the area — it also improves lighting.

Choosing Their Battles

Voters today will elect the next Undergraduate Assembly, but the decisions made during the next month will determine whether undergraduates have serious local representation.

Duchess Harris and Hunter Heaney are currently the candidates for chairperson of the Interfraternity Council and the Black Student Alliance, respectively.

However, while both candidates have opposing goals, their goals are not necessarily unrelated. The position of chairperson is the first step towards creating a coalition that could include both groups.

The Interfraternity Council and the Black Student Alliance are both powerful organizations on campus.

The administration can always brush aside one group, but a coalition has the power of numbers and can create mutually exclusive alliances, and thus they need each other to be effective.

With the right moves, next year could be the most important for these two groups.

Any of these issues could create coalitions that would be under an Interfraternity Council or the Black Student Alliance to address.

Iraq threatens use of banned gases on Israel

RAGHDAD, Iraq — President Saddam Hussein said for the first time yesterday that Iraq has deadly nerve gases and can deploy them in wars.

"Iraq has a weapon that can be called "The Scud,"" he said, adding that it can carry a "big load."

Iraqi troops were also seen in the desert preparing missile sites and other military bases.

Summary:

- Saddam Hussein announced that Iraq possesses and can deploy deadly nerve gases.
- Iraq's missile capabilities were also highlighted.

Musberger disputes story

DENVER (AP) — Brent Musburger's brother said yesterday that negotiations were still going on to persuade his brother to come back for another season.

"I'm concerned about some of the information that's floating around," said Todd Musburger, who represented his brother in contract negotiations.

"It's a question of whether or not he wants to get into the business of TV. It's hard to say what's going to come out." The games — and big-name basketball championship between "CBS" — will be the network's first broadcast on CBS. The network announced Monday that it wouldn't renew its $5 million per year contract after it expires at the end of this season.

The main issues apparently were money and high-profile assignments. Musburger, the network's sportscaster, was willing to give him.

"It was not a mutual decision; it was a unilateral decision. We in no way urged them to do it," Pilson said. "We were concerned about a news leak," Pilson said, both sides agreed that an announcement should be made the following day.

Rebels run to NCAA title
UNLV leaves scorch marks on Duke in 103-73 blowout

DENVER — The NCAA's ultimo bunch was at it again. UNLV ended the tournament of the century with a madhouse of a win that left the NCAA championship game, a 103-73 over Duke last night.

Jerry Tarkanian, the coach who brought the UNLV Rebels to the NCAA title in the past 15 years, guided UNLV to its first national title and Duke was humiliated as the Rebels with the most frustrating of postseason teams dominated the Blue Devils.

The Rebels were able to score more than 100 points in the championship game for the first time since 1957. They were also the first team to score more than 70 points in the championship game two years ago.

They did it with the style they have made famous — including All-American guard Rick Stab将其翻译成中文

NCAA COLLEGE BASKETBALL

UNLV leaves scorch marks on Duke in 103-73 blowout

Eight years after winning it all, Tarkanian and his team once again reached the pinnacle of college basketball.

"I had the feeling it was going to be different this time," Tarkanian said.

"But I was never really close to the end of the game, I just hope we can keep it up."
Seventy years ago. M. Hoops won nat’l title

From the March 29, 1980 edition of The Pennsylvania Daily News:

On Saturday night (March 27, 1980), the University of Pennsylvania women's basketball team won its second consecutive national championship with a 63-58 victory over the University of Delaware in the final game of the NCAA Women's Basketball Tournament. It was the first time that a Pennsylvania basketball team had won the national title.

The Penn women's basketball team is composed of some of the best female athletes in the country. The team is led by senior captain Amanda Grashof, a forward who is considered one of the top players in the country.

The team's success is due in part to the dedication and hard work of the players. The team practices six days a week, and each player is expected to give their best effort on the court.

The team's victory was a result of their teamwork and determination. They played a风格 of basketball that was characterized by quickness, agility, and precision. The team was able to outscore their opponents in the final game, 63-58, to win the national title.

Penn's victory was a historic moment for the university and the city. The team's success has inspired many young girls to pursue their dreams of playing basketball at the highest level. The team's achievement has also brought a sense of pride and joy to the community.

The team's success has not gone unnoticed. The university has dedicated a special exhibit to the team in the Penn Museum, and the city has organized a parade to celebrate their victory.

The team's success has also brought a sense of confidence and hope to the community. The team's victory has shown that anything is possible with hard work and dedication. The team's success has also brought a sense of unity and pride to the community.

The team's victory has brought a sense of excitement and hope to the community. The team's success has shown that anything is possible with hard work and dedication. The team's victory has also brought a sense of unity and pride to the community.
