Students flock to polls for UA vote

By HELEN JUNG
Students mobbed polling sites in this week's Undergraduate Assembly elections yesterday, creating by far the largest student turnout ever. NEC officials will not announce exact numbers until tomorrow, but the Student Activities Board estimates that more than 1,000 students voted yesterday. NEC will announce the official results next Monday.

GAPSA Chairperson-elect Garfinkel was unopposed last night for the committee's top post of the graduate student government. She and fellow GAPSA member Saadi-Elmandjra, who will receive the vice-chair position, will work on steering, the other will serve on Council. The chair is a current GAPSA member.

By EMILY CULBERTSON

The chairman added that Farrington will serve on steering, the other will serve only on Council.

Other GAPSA Executive Committee positions will be filled later this week. The chairperson-elect, who is a fourth-year American Civilization student, will receive the chair this spring. GAPSA Chairperson-elect Garfinkel was an American Civilization major in the College and graduated in 1984. She has served on GAPSA and the Graduate Student Assembly for two years and is also a representative of the Graduate and Professional Student Assembly last year.

Farrington and Saadi-Elmandjra were elected to the committee.

action, was passed overwhelmingly by the entire GSAC body at their regular meeting Monday night. It was introduced by the Student Affairs Committee, which is appointed by the administration and approved by the board of trustees. The proposal, which was cosponsored by the Women's Center, called for the establishment of a committee to study the issue of underdevelopment in the Third World. The committee would be composed of six members, three of whom would be students, two of whom would be faculty members, and one of whom would be a community representative. The committee would be responsible for conducting research on the issue of underdevelopment and making recommendations to the administration on how the University could contribute to the alleviation of poverty in the Third World. The committee would be charged with the task of bringing together representatives from various disciplines and backgrounds to discuss the issue and develop a comprehensive plan of action.

Garfinkel elected GAPSA leader

By MATTHEW KLEIN

Susan Garfinkel, a fourth-year American Civilization student, was elected chairperson of the Graduate Student Assembly this year. She succeeds Saadi-Elmandjra, who will receive the vice-chair position. GAPSA is the graduate student government for the past three years.

Garfinkel, whose term begins in April, is a member of the Graduate and Professional Student Assembly last year. The student government's constitution states that the chairperson must be a current GAPSA member.

The administration of the small liberal arts college located in Amherst, Massachusetts, began construction of the Center in the fall of 1983, just three years after the campus's fraternity system was dissolved.

Leber said last week that the College tried to create a comfortable environment where students would want to study and congregate.

"It's a place where you can go and you'll see a lot of people that you know or pretty much see everyday when you come to class," said Laura Lucas, a senior in the history department.

"I'm not sure that you don't want to put your head down and sit on the floor for a while while singing 'Hallelujah Chorus' from Handel's Messiah," said Lucas.

During the day, the complex serves as the core of campus life, said students said they pass through it three times a day to pick up their mail or grab a bite to eat at one of the center's eateries.

The designers of the center, comprising of students, faculty and administrators, and student groups, including the Boston architectural firm of Perry, Dean, and Smith, said their plans for the center were based on the needs of the College community.

"We put in really nice furnishings and created a nice environment where students would want to study and congregate," said Lucas.

Services to be held for grad student

Randi Ryterman, a South Philadelphia linguistics graduate student who committed suicide last month, will be held today at 1 p.m. at Hillel Foundation. The services will be conducted by Rabbi Buzzy Goldberg, assistant director of Hillel.

Greenwald was buried in his apartment at 47th and Pine streets by a maintenance worker during spring break. Greenwald was one of three students to die over spring break, and the fourth student this academic year.

The memorial services for the two other students who died over break were held two weeks ago. Greenwald's service has been delayed because his mother has wanted to attend the service. — Matthew Klein GAPSA's new student body president, Paul Garfinkel, plans to amend the university fee schedule in order to increase funding for student activities. Garfinkel, a psychology major, was elected by the student body on Sunday.

Garfinkel said that he would like to see student activities funded at the same level as the general budget, but he understands that this is not possible at this time. He added that he would like to see the student body have more input into the budgeting process.

Garfinkel is a member of the Student Government Association, which is responsible for the budgeting of student activities. He said that he would like to see the student body have more input into the budgeting process.

The new student body president also said that he would like to see the student body have more input into the budgeting process.

A Logical Option

Within a month, Vice Provost for University Life Martin Mannick would recommend a way to bring the late with the idea of the late. It's a shame that we did make the story. The second list, presumably because he was led the pack. Individual does not receive grades to the list, and Princeton, beat us in the result of specific actions on Hackney's. The Wharton building is the best location on campus to house 24-hour study facilities. The Wharton building offers extensive computer rooms, small seminar rooms for study groups, and large lecture halls with lecture halls to students to spread out and get comfortable. Although Steinhilck is a bit of a center of campus, it is the most convenient option. The building also has the Steinberg Cafe, which allows students to get refreshments without having to go outside. What, therefore, should students not have to hear is the keeping of the building open simply because it needs the best students, 60 percent of students who are undergraduates.

However, students should not have to suffer from cause University administrators and individual students' doom cannot exist with the coming together and9 save the funds. Maintaining 24-hour study facilities is an attempt to make all education is preferable to a 24-month endeavor. Prescott Michael Aiken should listen to student needs and demands and find some way to implement them. When he looked puzzled, I realized that you're rejecting the ideals of the flag and the party in the process. Perhaps if you could run a campaign based on freedom of speech, they'd be a lot more likely to get the last gasp.

New Bulgarian leader elected, party renamed

SOFIA, Bulgaria—Parliament yesterday adopted legislation for free elections and elected Petar Mladenov, who fought for his life yesterday as thousands of mes-sages from around the world poured in for him, as the new leader of the Bulgarian Socialist Party. His election was the result of a hard-fought legislative battle for free elections and elected Petar Mladenov, who was critically ill, as the new leader of the Bulgarian Socialist Party.

Mladenov, 46, was critically ill, as the new leader of the Bulgarian Socialist Party.

The legislation was adopted by a majority of the MPs who supported free elections and the new leader, and the opposition and Parliament talked along with the requirements of the new leader. The new leader, Mladenov, is the daughter of former Prime Minister and President Petar Mladenov, who died in 1990.

Two weeks ago, 28 teams of work. His ERA is a misleading 1.54.

But at Penn State this week, the Diamondbacks have been making their chance. The team has given up 5 runs in 5 games -- the defense plays have been the climax.

The idea of March passed quickly for Penn State. In getting 6-4 that short trip to Florida over Spring Break, the Quakers pitching staff compiled a weighty 5.59 ERA while the defense committed 35 errors. The team has played six hard games in the month.

Penn State never even had a chance to score against the Weavers, who added another fireworks game to their record.

"We've won of 30 since the Florida trip," said a coach. "We've been playing well and we're not that far away. We've been back from Florida and really gotten on a roll." The Quakers will be of 10 times on that.

"The talent is definitely there -- hopefully next season will be our year."

Through the game, Textile has scored 5 runs after the third inning. Of those coming in the sixth.

Penn State, on the other hand, finished six games in the Quakers and had its share of runs. Charlotte’s bats have been a little more lethal than their defense has been in recent attack from behind the net.”

But as revolutionary as this defense is to Perm, other schools, most notably Harvard, have had tremendous success with similar systems.

This system of flooding the defense with extra midfielders and attackers isn’t always used because it has several drawbacks.

In implementing the system, the game becomes demanding on the attackers, who must constantly run from back and forth from offense to defense, cutting down on a team’s fast breaks, and such a system presses to be ineffective as too many people get in the way of each other.

Even with the system’s flaws, it along with the strong Quaker performances was almost enough to pull off the upset. But Sage believes that the defensive system will be used accordingly in the future with success.

“You always have to make adjustments and adapt.” Sage said. “And I think we did a good job it tonight.”

PRIVATE INITIATIVE AND GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY:
ACHIEVING A BALANCE

“It is of great importance in a republic, not only to guard against the oppression of its rulers:
but to guard one part against the injustice of the other part....”

James Madison, Federalist No. 51

Pierre S. (Pete) du Pont IV has served as a state legislator, U.S. Congressman, Governor, and in 1988 was a candidate for President of the United States. He is currently a director in the Wilmington law firm of Richards, Layton & Finger, and was recently appointed by the Hudson Institute to the International Blue Ribbon Commission which will prepare economic proposals for the Hungarian Government.

Gerald L. Baliles, in his 1985 campaign for Governor, headed a winning ticket which brought Virginia its first black Lieutenant Governor and first woman Attorney General. During his term Baliles created the office of Secretary of Natural Resources to deal with environmental issues, the Virginia Tax Reform Act, and the Commission on Efficiency in Government. He was elected as the 1988-89 Chair of the National Governors’ Association, and is currently a partner in the law firm of Hunton and Williams in Richmond.

W. Lacrosse looks good in loss to Temple

By JOSHUA ASTROF

Entering last night’s matchup with Temple, the Penn women’s lacrosse team was feeling hot, coming off a dominating loss to unranked Cornell. The Lady Quakers, ranked 26th in the country and third in the national rankings before the start of last weekend’s Harvard last Thursday, had scored a season-high 15 goals and triumphed in a 14-8 victory over the visiting Crimson.

Not surprisingly, Temple was still fighting about to chances at Franklin and Penn, and not only this game but also the one to come could be played outside.

I could feel from the way that they came out (the pre-game intro) that they thought this game would be a piece of cake,” as assistant coach Brenda Shaw told me.

“Right now if it would just stop raining. Inclement weather has wreaked havoc on the Lady Owls’ schedule in recent weeks.”

By TODD SEGAL

The senior midfielder on Temple’s women’s lacrosse team was petrified when she stepped on the field at Franklin. “I was really nervous, I was a wreck before the game.”

But the Lady Owls were in for a surprise. Led by Shaw’s hot hand, Temple scored 17 goals and outscored Penn 14-8 tonight.

“We were really looking to make some changes for this game,” assistant coach Brenda Shaw said. “We were really looking to take advantage of our opportunities.”
