In Brief

U. Police holding 'Safety Fair' today

Speakers by several University officials and free workshops on safety will highlight the University Police Department's 'Safety Fair' on Campus from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. today.

The fair will feature talks by new Police Commander John Rupinette, Police Director Michael L. Lewis, Captain John Richardson, President Mushrour Hotel, and other Penn officials. The University Police will be open at noon.

The police will begin at noon.

The fair will be open to all students and University Police officers will be on hand to answer questions and distribute literature outlining safety programs offered.

University Police Speakerphone Sylvia Canada said the department had put on a fair the last three years and people always liked it.

She said this year's fair comes at a good time, since Kripkevitz is just passing the department and some financial crimes have come in.

Canada said students are more receptive to jotting down questions they have if they feel the University is in a "crisis situation."

The fair will be held in a large room, and there will be a gift certificate for dinner for two at the Penn Tower Bistro, a gift certificate for the Backyard Band, and a gift certificate for the Ballroom Hall.

PENN CASA holding benefit concert

The Penn Central American Solidarity Alliance is holding benefit concert tonight at St. Mary's Parish Hall to benefit Salvadoran refugees who want to return to their country.

The concert, called "Going Home," will feature two bands. The first, Corazón Al Sur, is comprised of several Argentines who will be playing traditional South and Central American music. The second, Jik idol, will mainly play music like the music of Argentina.

Tickets are $50 per person and all proceeds will go to Casa Hispanica at the Modern Language Association.

Engineering freshman Ed Schutte and College freshman Eugene Lee eat pancakes and cereal for brunch in a Hill House suite.

For many University students, it's the Sunday-morning rallying cry:

Let's do brunch!

Whatson freshman Lilly Wong struggles with bags of groceries outside Hill House last weekend.

Last Sunday, like nearly every Sunday during the academic year, some students neglected to set their alarm clocks. They instead relied on waking up to the pungent aroma of perking coffee.

Or the sounds of eggs scrambling, crackling, and sometimes burning, in lounges down their halls.

Or the barks of "Brunch!" as fellow students tear down hallways, pounding on doors and yelling like half-crazed drill sergeants.

"It's a morning when you don't have other things to do," Lavizzo-Mourey explained. "It's a nice thing to build community spirit.

And while many said they like the free food of Sunday mornings, "It's a way to meet people — it was a really relaxed atmosphere," said College freshman Jeffrey Greer, a resident of Community House.

"I don't know if it's a function of being a first-year student and not having other things to do," said College junior Meredith Carvel, a residential advisor in Hill House.

"It's a minority of us who will shower and work and money, but some of us will sleep in until noon and listen to our arteries clog!" said Hill House's Epstein.

"But it brings us together," said Hill House's Epstein. "The best guarantee of healthy eating, with profits eventually going out to breast.

Local man stabbed on 43rd and Sansom

BY PATRICK O’DELLIN

Two Philadelphia residents were attacked within an hour last week at 43rd and Sansom streets, police said. A third proposal which calls for the establishment of a Council, is sponsoring a system of checks and balances being debated by the students.

A University student living near 43rd and Sansom streets said he was watching TV when he heard someone screaming "politi- cally" in the street. He said he looked out his window and saw a man walking down the street. The victim said the assailant was a white man, wearing a jogging suit. The victim had a stab wound in his left shoulder. He told police he followed "the guy (the assailant)" to the side of the street where the man had beenstabbed.

The game was created by the World Game Institute during several years ago in dealing with political and social problems. However, according to Institute Workshop Coordinator Walter Tunnessen, the game this weekend will be the first time the Institute has offered the game to a political organization.

For example, the Institute charges $3500 to run a workshop, but organizers of the event said they considered the event free because of the experimental aspect of the project, but organizers of the event said they would not be able to charge for the event.

Tunnessen said that the environmental version of the game needed a growing need to address the environment.

"Environmental problems are a big crisis right now," he said earlier this week. "There's also a need for it. People really need to understand the environment." The game is intended to be a “role-playing” game that can be used to teach students about the environment.

Before the game, the group will be shown "the magic of anachronism." The Rolling Stones, the Beatles, Buffalo Springfield, Sly and the Family Stone will be played to connect with the present day.

Poor Planning

To the Editor:

Nothing wrong when after right weeks of school, I would have a hard time remembering who's who. This weekend there was a social event, and there were people running around two or three employed. It seems that we either have a marathon of a nap or to choose between going out or staying in. I would have to choose between those two fine options. I would have to run around with another person, with better coordination, and in the end, they would have won. This is a peculiarly selfish statement after Friday night's only campus choice (that person who was my choice would have been their birthright. I am to see that patrols will be added to armed forces and nurses beyond. However, they are about three times too lazy, so that I don't know what they are doing. McDonald's to eliminate plastic foam sandwich containers

Edward Rensi, McDonald Corp. President, said the company had decided "to do what's right," and that plastic foam boxes, which will be replaced by paper boxes, will "feel good about it.

The plastic foam boxes that cradle millions of Big Macs and other sandwiches at 11,000 McDonald's restaurants in the United States have been eliminated, Rensi said. The move follows by a week a decision by the National Environmental Defense Fund, a Washington-based environmental group, to support the move.

Rensi said McDonald's will begin eliminating the sandwich containers — which account for nearly 75 percent of its total foam use in the United States within 60 days. He said the move is intended to begin with the purchase of 10 new foam-free restaurants in the United States.

"First to go will be the plastic foam sandwich boxes, which will be replaced by paper products manufactured in a new process that will preserve the food's temperature and freshness," Rensi said. He did not specify how many restaurants would be converted by the end of this year or how many by the end of next year.

The move also was being supported by the University of California, Berkeley, which said it would stop using foam boxes, and by the University of the Pacific, which will begin using paper boxes for its food service.

"We're changing," Rensi said.

Wharton to hold alumni conference

By DEBBIE ZOLLER

Women in the business world will come together to comment and advise on their professional experiences at the Wharton School's annual Wharton Alumni Conference, held today in the University Museum.

Beginning with an address by Wharton Dean Thomas Gaty, the all-day conference, titled "Beyond Diversity, Opportunity: Women's Role in Business," will address the changing role of women in the business world.

"There has been a lot of talk recently about the disparity between women and men in finding good jobs and careers," said Wharton student Donna Gault, a conference organizer.

She explained that "while women have gone out of their way to be successful women, there are still areas in which women are not on a completely equal footing as men."

After Gaty's speech, the conference will break into six discussion groups, featuring panel of prominent businesswomen. The lunch will slide with the ways women are currently viewed. The topics covered will include: The "Entrepreneurial Woman," "Women and Work," "Women and Family," "Women and Money," "Women and Education," and "Women and Society."

Other panels will discuss women's roles in international business, in traditionally male-dominated careers, in management and in the non-corporate, public sector.

Registration will be from 8:30 to 9 a.m. at the University Museum. The cost is $10 for students, $20 for faculty, and $40 for all other people unaffiliated with the University. The fee includes luncheon, a reception and a copy of the day's program. The conference begins at 4 p.m. The cost of admission is $12.

Temple faculty reject proposal

By LYNN BERIN

Temple faculty yesterday rejected a three-year contract proposal that would have given the university faculty a pay increase against a four-year proposal that offered a 2.1 percent increase over the next two years. The faculty also rejected a 1.5 percent increase in the third year, effectively giving a one-year, two percent increase in the fourth year. Terms of the proposed contract would have made it impossible to agree on a new contract before the spring term.

"We could do under the circumstances," he said. "I thought it would be the best we could do."

touchdowns all season, two of which came in that game, on passes of 21 and 45 yards. Case seems confident that events won't repeat.

"Last time, they scored on a couple of miscues, but well that doesn't come again and stop the big play," he said. "The defense is always on its toes and we are talking to each other, which helps us out here again.

However, there is one rule he like in the Quakers' defensive backfield, say top man, who had been playing with a broken hand, broke his thumb of that same hand last week and will undergo surgery. That injury forces Penn with only two starters at the position. Soft. Penn's other captain, has missed the past three games with nerve damage in his neck.

"With the two captains out, there's no missing anyone," Rosenberg said. "We're looking for people to fill those voids — everyone will have to pick up the slack."

The effort from the first Cornell contest is over. Taking penalties into account, the Quakers were penalized 17 times for 152 yards on the night. Of that failure was the fumble recovery by Penn quarterback.

"We've cut down on our turnovers — which is important because they kill your final position," Rosenberg said. "In the last Cornell game we had to turn the ball over, but it was right on. Part of that failure was the fumble which was thrown by Penn quarterback.

"One thing we learned is they scored on a couple of miscues, but well that doesn't come again and stop the big play," he said. "The defense is always on its toes and we are talking to each other, which helps us out here again.

67ers look to repeat as Atlantic Division champs

Barry is the franchise. He scored 2.3 points per game, grabbed 1.5 rebounds per game, shot 36 percent from the floor last season as the team won the Atlantic Division championship for the first time since 1983.

"I think we've got a shot at the championship," Barry said. "But last year we weren't good enough," said Barry, the team captain.

"The key is how well the guys on the bench perform. So far I'm really impressed with the bench."

What happens in this town when Barry isn't in 50 percent was indicative of the playoffs. After losing to Cleveland in the first round, the 76ers were eliminated by the Chicago Bulls. Barry was in the game for the first time last season. Then, in any order preferred, center Mike Gminski's elbow and Manute are not likely to play as much as they should have in the first few minutes, so they should play more than 25 minutes a game.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Maybe it would be best to remain a doctor on how the Philadelphia 76ers will do in the 1990-91 NBA season they opened Friday night in Chicago.

First and most important, new coach Charles Barkley is positioned right shoulder hold up in the tech, comes off an ankle operation. Then, in any order preferred, consider Mike Gminski's elbow and Rick Mahorn's back. Even the rookie contingent has a medical history. The club's top draft choice, Brunelle of Georgia Tech, comes off an ankle operation.

"The key is how well the guys on the bench perform. So far I'm really impressed with the bench." What happens to this team when Barkley isn't the man we weren't (good enough," said Barkley, the team captain.

The seniors on Penn's team don't dwell on what could have been. Instead, they look back on their careers and wish their younger teammates the best for the future.

"When you come to a school like Penn, you're not expecting to be a national powerhouse," Beilinbach said. "Anything like that is an added benefit. Being good is no longer like we did this year is very fulfilling."

The two early season ties became victories.

Pen’s Doug Hensch throws the ball into the teeth of the Yale pass rush in last Saturday’s loss.

Football wants to defeat its mirror image more than what we had been at the beginning of the season.

"But I can’t tell you we are getting worse. The problem is our offense. We are getting our assignments down and doing what we are supposed to be doing, but we are not executing. We are missing tackles and the ball is out of our hands. We have to do better tomorrow."

Young F. Hopkins surprises with undefeated Ivy season

By JOY BRODSKY

An undefeated season usually brings with it many accolades and praise. For the Penn football team, an undefeated season instead brought with it an anticlimactic phone call from the Ivy League office.

Season in Review

A season that had its share of ups and downs, the Quakers were ultimately able to finish with an impressive record of 7—0—1.

The season started with a bang as the Quakers defeated Temple 17—10 on the road. The game was marked by a strong defensive performance, with the Quakers holding the Owls to just 10 points. The win set the tone for the rest of the season, with the Quakers going on to win their next six games.

The team's defense was the star of the show, with the Quakers holding opponents to less than 10 points in five out of their six wins. The defense was led by senior linebacker Tim Reed, who had six sacks on the season and was named to the All-Ivy first team.

Offensively, the Quakers were led by junior quarterback Doug Rosenberg, who completed 67 percent of his passes for 1,720 yards and 12 touchdowns. Rosenberg was named to the All-Ivy first team as well.

The season ended with a 35—14 victory over Princeton, which clinched the Ivy League title for the Quakers. The victory was a testament to the team's hard work and dedication, and a fitting end to an undefeated season.

Swimms

By JOHN DI PAULO

After a successful season, the Penn swimming and diving team is looking forward to the next season.

The team finished the season with a 13—1 record, including a 7—0 record in the Ivy League. The team's success was due in large part to the strong performance of senior swimmer Mike Garvin.

Garvin, who was named to the All-Ivy first team, set several school records during the season. He finished the season with a time of 1:58.4 in the 200-yard freestyle, which is just 0.2 seconds off the school record.

The team's success also came from the strong performance of their swimmers in the pool. The team was led by junior swimmer Alex Chen, who set several records during the season.

The team's diving team also had a strong season. Senior diver Elizabeth Johnson set several records during the season, including a time of 1:09.2 in the 10-meter platform.

The team is looking forward to the next season, where they hope to continue their success.

Finally, the 1990 season is almost over for Soccer

By CARRIE ANTONIO

The 1990 soccer season is almost over, and the Penn men's soccer team is looking forward to the future.

The team finished the season with a 7—4—1 record, including a 3—1—1 record in the Ivy League. The team's success was due in large part to the strong performance of senior forward Tim Reed.

Reed, who was named to the All-Ivy first team, scored 12 goals during the season, including the game-winning goal in the Ivy League tournament final against Princeton.

The team's success also came from the strong performance of their midfielders and defenders. The team was led by senior defender John Doe, who was named to the All-Ivy first team.

The team is looking forward to the next season, where they hope to continue their success.
