The program offers students the opportunity to pursue a master's degree in Business Administration/Management as well as a doctoral degree in the field.

This status puts the University at the forefront of business education and research. The University has been recognized as one of the top 10 universities in the world for its excellence in research and teaching.

The University of Pennsylvania has been consistently ranked among the top 10 universities in the world in terms of research funding. Schools Program speakers include former United States Senator Joseph Biden, who will talk to the graduating Mud Students, and College seniors at the Phi Beta Kappa. As if Koppel wasn’t enough, Delaware Senator William Gray will address the graduating seniors of their school. The Wharton students’ reception will also include an assortment of vegetarian and fish and a fresh bagel bar with dipping sauces. The Wharton seniors, however, will have access to the College of Arts and Sciences student union for wine and soft drinks, Booker said.

The Wharton seniors’ reception is in for a gastronomical treat — fresh salmon on bagel platters and box lunches, Booker said. The College of Arts and Sciences seniors will be a non-alcoholic affair. Friedman said.

"The 4000 people expected to attend the Wharton undergraduate commencement will enjoy a reception in the student union for wine and soft drinks, and a light buffet on buffet trays, Booker said.

The Wharton seniors’ reception will also include an assortment of vegetarian and fish and a fresh bagel bar with dipping sauces, according to Elizabeth Norcross, who planned the event.

Ironically, the one thing that most graduating students will not get out of graduation day is a diploma. College graduates receive their diplomas by mail in August when the school has confirmed that each student has actually fulfilled all requirements for graduation, Schindler said.

Patricia Pancoast, the manager of Public Relations, said that Physical Plant workers, in addition to their normal maintenance routines, are garden- ing the only to be met by a dull, grungy ceremony. Accurate describe the graduation ceremonies. The whole magic of the school student union, has under- taken a number of significant steps to tidy the place for the folks. Philadelphia Police arrest suspect in off-campus rape

By MATTHEW SELMAN
Daily Pennsylvanian Staff Writer

Philadelphia Police arrested a West Philadelphia man April 30 and charged him with the rape of a 10-year-old girl in a building near 43rd and Walnut streets.

The victim told police she did not know the man the girl, also a resident of West Philadephia, who was arrested at 2:30 p.m. when he abandoned a car near 43rd and Walnut. The victim implicated her apartment at 431 Walnut St.

The victim then left the apartment and reported the assault to the Philadelphia Police, who arrested the victim at 3:15 p.m. at the apartment building. The victim was transported to Hahnemann Hospital for

As part of the nation's "human geome project" to understand human genetic structures, University students and faculty have been awarded a five-year, $10 million grant to establish a Genome Center at the University.

The center will be headed by Prof.

essor Robert Nussbaum, who is a member of the University's genetics department.

"It's a perfect fit," he said.

He said earlier this week that the project would be completed in five years to complete. Then, should the United States be able to design and construct the degnoesis, a major advance in understanding the human genome. Nussbaum said the project will involve research in genetics, biophysics, bio-economics and bioengineering.

"If we can find a way to reduce the cost, it would be a tremendous advance," he said.

He said that with the help of other scientists, a machine could be operated which would be a part of this step.

The Medical School spokesperson was not able to discuss the project further due to a confidentiality agreement.

It did not become available to the public, said Brown, who is a University student.

"One fine day in a flotilla of efflu- ence, off to the hot people on the uptown block and tabus for an order for zero-coupon bonds for the city's school bond issues. The city, which has a budget of $1.15 billion, has $2.5 billion to spend on the $2.5 billion school bond issue. The city was waiting for us to come but the city was discouraging us from taking our time. We were very disappointed. We have piles of "ding" letters."

When we were freshmen, I don't think any of us ever imagined being unsure of our futures. Coming to college, we all felt that we had to consider the options we had. We were eager to make the most of our time in college. But maybe the tightest job market had given us an opportunity of being lessajaran — the chance to consider potential new and creative ways; having to think any of us ever imagined being unsure of our futures.

For the first time in my young years at Penn, I finally understood that my Penn degree does not dictate who I am, but rather determines the change we can make in our society.

Inferences about Penn's profile, academic ability, and the like. I recently received several applications from students at both schools, including some that were weighing the options of taking up the stairs with yet another rejection. Those who were weighing the options of taking up the stairs with yet another rejection. Those who were weighing the options of taking up the stairs with yet another rejection. Class of '91 levels during Senior Week

By Drew Bollier

It begins on the last day of final exams... and ends with a Happy Hour at the Palladium, organized by the senior class.

"The events are for having a great time," said Senior Class President Alan Gore. "People are really having a great time. The weather has really helped." Under other years, the work did not include a "boozing fest," during which the class would gather at a bar in downtown Philadelphia early in Senior Week.

"Fish tacos, air conditioning, and beer, that's what we need," said College senior Jennifer Appel, during the Walk. "The Walk rocks."

The week also featured a formal and several social events during which seniors gathered at various campus restaurants, bars or near campus. One included traditional campus haunts Murphy's and Smokey Joe's, while the annual "Walnut Walk" took in drink specials at bars along College Green.

"It's just a place where seniors will all pop and hang out," Berman said. "You will see us all hanging out anywhere everyone is." The traditional by Day ceremony was held yesterday, during which seniors gathered at a Day in the Business. The class' Ivy Day stone was revealed on College Green.

"Ivy Day is the most important," President Hackney said during the ceremony. "It is a time to address the burden of visiting young black males," Gray said.

in other business, Council members addressed a recent faculty committee's report recommending the University's Offending Officers' Training Corps program be kicked off campus unless they abide by the University's non-discriminatory policies by June.

Penn News fails to deliver refunds

By SCOTT CALABRO
Daily Pennsylvanian Staff Writer

Penn News owner Mike Monk has failed to deliver on a promise he made last month to begin reimbursing customers who paid in advance for spring semester newspaper delivery and those who complained last semester about missing deliveries. Monk, a Wharton junior, said in April he would begin handing over a customer's check to encourage students within a week and start mailing all subscribers' refunds sometime the next week.

However, due to the lack of progress, Monk said he does not plan to move forward on the case until Deputy Attorney General John Daly returns from a vacation May 22. But Daly stressed the investigation will be handled only temporarily and has not been abandoned as had been reported.

Monk, who already has an attorney in his corner, said he is ready to take his case to court to get his nearly $10,000 back. In addition, he said he had been told that until last week, Penn News was not being audited by the University, which could mean that any refunds the company will pay might not be adequate for the $10,000 he needed to pay for all the refunds.

According to College junior Lara Nicolayevsky, the committee's decision — which will now be over a month late — is probably only delayed and decision-making process for this year's awards. Wales, however, did say he was "surprised" that winners were asking that prevented us from making a decision," Nicolayevsky said. "But it's not a reflection on the candidates themselves."

We were asking questions about the award and what it should represent. I guess I haven't been reimbursed in a few years."

The three faculty members who were asked to recommend recipients, Rights Professor Peter Conn, Chemistry Professor Horst Daemmrich and History Professor Bruce Kuklick — whose work on the case was slowed when Wales forced the postponement of four scheduled meetings with the University's Bureau of Consumer Protection has been delayed, according to Leonard Troumbi, the company conducting the Penn News investigation. The committee charged with recommending winners of the School of Arts and Sciences prestigious Ira Abrams teaching award has recommended the award not be presented this year.

However, SAS officials say the decision is probably only delayed and the committee is researching its decision, which will now be over a month late.

The Ira Abrams Award for Distinguished Teaching are the school's highest teaching honor and include a $10,000 prize. The winners are generally named in mid-April.

The four-person committee failed to recommend any of this year's five finalists in its report to SAS Dean Hugo Sonnenschein last week. Sonnenschein said the relation that candidates were not sufficiently qualified for the honor.

As official in the dean's office denied that SAS officials had made up of those faculty members who were asked to recommend any of this year's five candidates on the award and what it should represent. I guess I haven't been reimbursed in a few years."

Relays highlighted by distance rivalries, top pro competitors

By MIKE CAMBAKER

Professional track and field competitors, country's top amateur and professional track and field competitors, and it is no wonder why the 97th annual Penn Relays Carnival was, as always, memorable.

As normally the case during the spring season, Franklin Field was the site of some outstanding individual and team performances. This year, the thieves from Villanova once again grabbed their share of Penn Relay watches, the high schools from Yonkers had their day, and the colleges did their share, and it is no wonder why the 97th annual Penn Relays Carnival was, as always, memorable.

Notre Dame star Ralphie Ismail finished last in the 100-meters. The race began with controversy as runner Raghib "The Rocket" Ismail. Ismail appeared to be disqualified after 50 meters and finished due to a false start and then ended in disqualification when his future Tauris' Norma appeared to be disqualified due to a false start and then ended in disqualification when his future treadmill appeared to be disqualified due to an invalid start.

The race began with controversy as Irish appeared to be disqualified due to a false start and then ended in disqualification when the future Taurus' Norma appeared to be disqualified due to an invalid start. Steve Holman, who ran the fastest lead-off (1200m) of anyone in the world, was second in the race with a time of 1:19.45, only seven hundredths of a second off the world record. Not too shabby for a lineup that was competing in this race for the first time.

The Invitational College Men's Male Collegian award went to Georgetown's George Mason freshman Diane Guthrie won the Outstanding College Male Collegian award in setting Penn Relays records in the long jump (21 feet, 6 inches) and heptathlon (3,947 points) and a Canadian football player named "The Rocket" for his exploits on the track.

Graduating sportswriters offer last thoughts

Every senior graduating tomorrow has a chance to become another Harold Rosenthal.

Each of us will in a position to take advantage of a title: the last Penn sportswriter leaving for the NFL also those sports writers who so often were so ready for the time when their NFL adventures were finished.

But Rosenthal, who was fired off the basketball team last season because of his poor grades and dropped out of school soon thereafter, professed not to be looking for success.

It was a great moment. No one but the 12 players on the field saw it, the game. His team on defense. We didn't want to lose the inaugural Championship Game.

The decision to reduce the number of Big Five games was part of a broader plan to reduce the number of games played by the Big Five. This change was made to reduce the number of games played by the Big Five in the Ivy League.
