When it comes to CHOP's annual "Toy Run for Tots," the group has been able to maintain a strong presence despite the challenges that often face disinterest among the groups. Two years ago, when Penn Watch had about 400 volunteers, the annual event was coordinated by Connaissance. "It doesn't require an army to make the program work," Chard Smith, chairperson of Connaissance, said in a statement. "Our thoughts and prayers go to his family during this very sad time." Police yesterday said they are looking for a "prosecutorial" JIO and a "settlement" partner's position into two parts, a further "prosecutorial" JIO and a "settlement" partner's position into two parts, a further...

A biweekly look at graduate student life and education

Despite student Chang Cheng, traveled thousands of miles across the globe to study mathematics at Dally Pennsylvania State University. This is one of hundreds of Asian students who leave their homeland to study at the University. But across the nation, there is a growing concern that there are "too many" international students in their home turf.

Studying Abroad

Hundreds of Asian students leave their homeland and travel halfway around the world to study in the United States. And many foreign students who come to the United States for the first time find that U.S. schools, and specifically the University, is not what they expected.

Mathematics and science departments, international students, specifically Asian, make up a greater percentage than in other University departments. According to the University registrar, international students comprise 20 percent of the student body. But there is a possibility that this percentage may increase in the near future. During recent years, the number of international students has been increasing at a rate of 10-15 percent per year. According to the University registrar, international students now constitute 20 percent of the student body.

Many international students said that they are not sure if they will remain on top of academic reasons. But Fortune said that although international students are "light," he is not sure if he will return home after graduation. "I'm not sure if I'll stay here... it depends wherever there's a job," he said.

"Across the board there is a shortage of qualified and interested Asian students in math and the sciences," said George Palladino. "A mark of U.S. research universities is that they can compete effectively on an international scale. There's only really one scientific community. There's no national boundaries."

Physics Professor Terry Fortune, whose department is about 20 percent Asian, also said that physics is an international field. But Fortune said that although international students make a significant contribution to the University, the students come east of the Pacific. "Because we give them full support, the Ojibwa Dance Drum: its History and Construction and Wild Rice International Crafts: Grateful Dead, a recently released album.

Student inventor needs backing for new security system

By DANIEL CHETSON

NEW ORLEANS — Jeanne Hinds has an idea — a computer-based system that could reduce the number of rapes on the campus. It's just that the University of Mississippi is not so sure about the idea.

"We are in the process of evaluating the notion," said Dr. Harry Temple, vice chancellor for academic affairs. "Our concern is that the technology be safe and secure, and that we get the best possible advice from experts on it."

The computerized system would require students to press a button on their key chains when they felt threatened. The system would send an alert to police and university administrators, who would then call the police department and contact the student concerned.

This week, Dr. Temple said he was not sure whether the system would be installed on campus.

Hinds, who is a junior in chemical engineering, said she had been working on the system for three years. She said the system would help prevent rape and other crimes.

"It's a matter of time before we have a rape on our campus," she said.

University administrators have been cautious about the system, but they say they will consider it if it is found to be safe and effective.

"We are open to any technology that can help prevent crime," said Dr. Temple.

The computerized system would use a software program that would send an alert to police and university administrators when a student presses the button.

"We are not sure whether the system will work," said Dr. Temple.

The university is also considering other technologies, such as a system that would alert police when a student is in danger.

"We are looking at all options," said Dr. Temple.

The university has been working on the computer-based system for three years, but it has not been installed on campus because of concerns about the technology.

"We are still in the process of evaluating the system," said Dr. Temple.

The University Lied to the Kids

On October 9, the University News and Public Relations Office released a statement, which contained the following untrue statements: The University did not conceal the existence of the Holocaust. However, any positive results that could come from this truth were obscured by the use of a lie detector test.

I have written this letter to the editor of the University News because I believe that the university should be held accountable for its actions. The University has a history of hiding the truth from the public, and this most recent incident is just one of many.

In 1998, the University News published an article about the Holocaust. The article stated that there were no proofs of the Holocaust, and that it was all just a lie. This statement was completely false, and it was an attempt to mislead the public into thinking that the Holocaust never happened.

In 2002, the University News published an article about the results of a lie detector test. The article stated that the results of the test showed that there were no proofs of the Holocaust. This statement was equally false, and it was an attempt to mislead the public again.

I believe that the University should be held accountable for its actions. The University should be transparent and honest with the public, and it should not try to hide the truth.

I hope that this letter will bring attention to the University's actions, and that it will help to ensure that the University is held accountable for its actions in the future.
Wharton deans meet with undergrads

By HEIDI GEFFEN

Wharton Dean Thomas Gerrity and Vice Dean Janice Bellace answered undergraduates' questions on several topics, including whether the school would introduce extra-credit options for a select number of courses.

Gerrity, who is responsible for overseeing education at all levels of Wharton—undergraduate, MBA, and doctoral—told students that the idea of introducing extra-credit options has not been discussed.

"There is no data that supports your premise," Gerrity said to a student who asked if students would have the option of earning extra-credit.

Gerrity passed most of the questions that dealt with specific aspects of the undergraduate program to Bellace.

"I hope you know me. If you don't, you don't know who you go with mistakes," Bellace said.

Bellace told students about several new study abroad programs that are being planned in Europe and France as well as an "expansive international focus" on the Wharton website.

"Although students agreed that the session was useful, they were disappointed by the sparse attendance. Fewer than 20 of Wharton's 2,000 undergraduates were there.

"I was shocked and appalled that there were only 45 or 50 students there," said Wharton senior Joy Fubozzi.

For Penn, it all comes down to this: The last-place race

By ZACH CONE
The Daily Pennsylvanian

This isn't just a regular game anymore. This is the future. The last game of the season. It's your senior night. It's your last game as an athlete. It's your last chance to prove that you're as good as your name suggests. It's your last chance to do what you've been working towards all year. It's your last chance to leave your mark on the program. It's your last chance to leave your legacy.

Kicking Mishaps of the Week

Let us be honest. Kickers are not the most exciting part of a football game. But let's be real, they are still an integral part of the game. You can't have a football game without kickers. They are the ones who kick the ball down the field, they are the ones who score points, they are the ones who determine the outcome of the game. So let's take a moment to appreciate them.

Adding Insult to Injury

The Quakers have been struggling on the field this season. They have had a tough time finding the end zone and have been held to just a few points in most of their games. But what's worse than the loss is the missed field goal by Luke Faller that could have provided at least a morale boost. This is the second time this season that the Quakers have been denied a chance to score.

This is the second time this season that the Quakers have been denied a chance to score.

Injury Report of the Week

In the past, we have heard about players going down with injuries. But this week, we have heard about players going down with injuries and being forced to leave the field. This is the first time this season that the Quakers have had to deal with multiple injuries in a game. It's going to be tough to replace these players, but the team will have to find a way to do it.

The post game comment.

We've never known a team to be virtually ignored. The Quakers were perhaps the first team ever to be virtually ignored. The Quaker coach was explaining Columbia's ground-bound ways during the rest of the player season. Reaching only five out of the last six games, primarily running the option, he is so unique and effective, it's patented!

Let us be honest. Kickers are not the most exciting part of a football game. But let's be real, they are still an integral part of the game. You can't have a football game without kickers. They are the ones who kick the ball down the field, they are the ones who score points, they are the ones who determine the outcome of the game. So let's take a moment to appreciate them.

Adding Insult to Injury

The Quakers have been struggling on the field this season. They have had a tough time finding the end zone and have been held to just a few points in most of their games. But what's worse than the loss is the missed field goal by Luke Faller that could have provided at least a morale boost. This is the second time this season that the Quakers have been denied a chance to score.

21-10, holding them to 31 rushing yards. In that game, running back Terrence Tossie 167 yards on the season, proved he would be a force for the rest of the season as well. As the season progressed, Tossie continued to carry the load for the Quakers. He was named one of the top 10 running backs in the nation by various analysts.

The Quakers continued to dominate on defense, allowing only seven points to opponents like Columbia (28-0), Brown (22-10) and Yale (14-10) and crushing Princeton in their season finale 44-7. The Quakers' loss blemish came in a hard-fought 144 battle with Navy. The Midshipmen, who entered the game with a winless record, played a great game and went on to win 14-13 in overtime. The loss was enough to knock the Quakers out of the FCIAC.

After the loss, the Quakers rebounded, running off five straight victories on the road to the "state" title.

It’s just a lie

The University of Pennsylvania picnic often is predictable. The ticket office published several advertisements in The Daily Pennsylvanian last week announcing that students could line up in the ice at Frostbite to secure 3a.m. tickets. It is not a lie.

Apparently, at any time between the hours of 11 a.m. and 2 a.m., tickets would be sold and when tickets actually did go on sale, a student could go to the ticket office and find that the line was already established. That person would then determine how everybody else could get in line. And if that person took this effort Friday afternoon, they were told that they were first, and that thereafter people could sign up as a sheet or go to the line. However, people who relied upon the information that one could have started nothing on the sheet indefinitely unless he or she had been contacted by someone else to indicate this ‘traditional’ information by being the first person to initiate The Line.

The ticket office was either so re- gressed in not publishing accurate information or did not have any plan to initiate today’s announcement.

Not did any of the ads run in The Daily Pennsylvanian, and even worse, no one seemed to be aware of the fact that The Line had even occurred.

And just exactly how was one supposed to know about this tradition if you were not a part of The Line or one of the ticket office’s client base?

On the other hand, as long as the Red and Blue advertisement that took place over the homecoming fraternity and sorority theme, there is nothing on the sheet indicating that The Line existed at any time and anybody made every effort to contact the individual with The Line.

Not did any of the ads run in The Daily Pennsylvanian, and even worse, no one seemed to be aware of the fact that The Line had even occurred.

Jerry Burin’s high school basketball team was Penn-Prep. He readily admits that he totally lacked interest in the sport.

In his freshman year, however, Burin’s interest was piqued after his older brother was recruited to play for Penn-Prep.

During his junior year, Burin’s interest was sparked after his older brother was recruited to play for Penn-Prep.

‘He’s the kind of kid that once he takes something up, he goes at it incredibly hard’ says Neil, Roberta’s brother. ‘He’s a total loner, totally independent.’

In the ‘last’ year, Burin decided to start lifting weights to build a body of com- petite, which he did incredibly hard.

In the end, Burin realized that he was cut out for the sport.

The Pam’s freshmen football football and volleyball teams have been successful this year, and Burin now finds himself playing for the team.

‘I think he’s a good athlete, but he’s still a long way from being a varsity player,’ says Neil, Roberta’s brother.

For Burin, the road to success has been a difficult one. He had to overcome the challenges of high school and university, and now he is starting to come into his own.

Burin is now working hard on his technique, and he is looking forward to his future in college.

‘(Making Nationals! would have been the ultimate goal of the season, Lundy said.

The Penn freshman football football and volleyball teams have been successful this year, and Lundy now finds herself playing for the team.

‘I think he’s a good athlete, but he’s still a long way from being a varsity player,’ says Neil, Roberta’s brother.

For Burin, the road to success has been a difficult one. He had to overcome the challenges of high school and university, and now he is starting to come into his own.

Burin is now working hard on his technique, and he is looking forward to his future in college.
