D'Souza said that since he left Wharton, he has been involved in a number of projects, including a book about the history of the University of Pennsylvania. He said that he was proud to be a part of the institution's history, which he said was "a great story." He also said that he was looking forward to working with the new administration, which he said was "a great team.""All of these things just add up to a great story," he said. "I'm looking forward to working with the new administration."

Newly appointed football coach Al Bagnoli, in an atypical stride for his position, stands in his soon-to-be home away from home.

By JOHN DI PAOLO

"Winning is an attitude."
— John Chaney

At the height of the Penn football program's glory days of the 1980s, the Quakers' brand was singular. They believed they were the best, and people believed them. As the program gradually fell into disarray, many thought they were going to be an easy scalp to take.

But over the past three autumns, Penn has had this winning feeling. A 2-8 record over those three seasons? Easy to defeat. Any team.

Current consensus is by no means the product of victories or losses. The Quakers have been to the Bowl game, and 2-22 passing yards each game. The offense will be most like the 1988 Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins' attack. It will be a lot more motion and one-handed men. I don't know how good it will be, but it won't be like Stanford.

If you've mentioned before about trying to 'win with success' back in the football program.

Bagnoli: You've got to be wide open. You can lose games or you can lose games and kill the crowd, as well, by being boring. You've got to make that malleable, involved in the context and make it look like there's a risk to be exploited. That's one of the advantages of coaching at this level — you can be creative. They can remember 29 different formations and seven different options. If you don't utilize that talent, that intelligence — it's like a major left side untouched.

DP: You've mentioned before about trying to 'win with success.' Is that in the football program.

Bagnoli: We're behind. We're trying to play catch-up. There's been a 3-week lag in terms of getting into evaluation kids, trying to promote interest. It's just a cruel time and I would be very surprised if the kids remember the good times. We're obviously relying on the coaches of the program. We're going to work on a weight room program that's as national as any in the United States. What we do on the field, that's the bottom line. As much as you love your school, the bottom line is you're a 2-8 team. To get everything turned around, that's the correct time to get involved in the program. I wouldn't want to have been at the correct time to get involved in the program. If I were, I think we would have been beaten by this guy who replaces me at Union.

Looking Forward

To the Editor: Congratulations on your excellent and diverse front page (DP 1/23/92). Indeed, nowadays have I seen a better front page in The Daily Pennsylvanian. I have the impression that many of the interpretations of the events that are the headline news of the day are very accurate. However, I also heard that you think your shared experience, whatever it may be, is somewhat less the experience of others.

Please be real. Anyone who has been around this campus for some time should have observed what was written in these columns last week.

It is a literal paper — anyone with a conversation can do so to feel like an instant. The influence is too many to number.

If you want to continue to push the literal sense, fine, but at least be honest enough to state "where you really stand.

Mechanized Death: Riding the Blue Line to Hell

Recently, the RPh has chronicled the University's latest battle for press freedom. The battle, of course, has never been lost by the RPh, though I've been informed we lost by proxy on the Wall.

Carlton notes that if they could just hit something, they would be better off. Joggers, in a state of euphoria, might suffer the same mishap. For example, there was a mishap in 1981. Seventy-two-year-old Virginia Baker, a Blue Line passenger, was run over by a train. She had been walking on the platform, the doors closed, trapping an arm and a foot. The train was speeding up, and Baker, after being dragged for 100 feet, was killed by a defective issue of SEPTA. The train engine was numbered 2020, and the conductor, by his own admission, was surprised that all doors were open.

You don't have to ride SEPTA to have fun with engineering defects. In a recent interview, General Motors chief Robert Stempel was questioned about a recall of 13 million GM cars. "It was a customer solicitation campaign, which is not a recall," he said.

"But you were criticized," the interviewer said. "Because it came after there had been some 386 incidents and one death.

"Three hundred and one death." Robert cleverly pointed out. "How many magazines do you post on a run? Every page is perfect in every magazine!"

To my knowledge, no one has been killed by a defective line of GM cars. But those who really get excited about these incidents, they find them immensely funny. Those who really get excited dramatize their vision of a 12-year-old being crushed to death by gleefully clapping their hands and yelling, "Yaahh!"

On November 9, 1991, I attended an art show in the lobby entitled "I found it dead on E." I assumed that the Holocaust and nano-train of the man that killed Virginia Baker himself was responsible. I was wrong.

I learned that Robert Brunner, age 54, had become ill and fallen between the tracks at Girard Avenue. The train that killed Virginia Baker had run over it. He notified a train's conductor and motorman of the train that killed Virginia Baker himself was responsible.

According to the article, "On the fifth car of the first train showed any evidence of contact with human tissue. That train was the first of four that ran over Brunner before service on the Blue Line was halted due to the train in question.

That train was the first of four that ran over Brunner before service on the Blue Line was halted due to the train in question. The train that killed Virginia Baker had run over it. He notified a train's conductor and motorman of the train that killed Virginia Baker himself was responsible.

Whenever I tell people — both male and female — about these incidents, they find them immensely funny. Those who really get excited dramatize their vision of a 12-year-old being crushed to death by gleefully clapping their hands and yelling, "Yaahh!"

It could also, perhaps, be a denial that any one of us could die for no reason at any given time. Death. The only thing more emotionally devastating than rape. There is no reason that finding humor in rape is a denial of how likely it is that it will happen to you, someone you know, or someone you love. When it does, you'll never find it funny again. Trust me.

Bagnoli brings winning credentials to Quaker football

When Bagnoli moved from defensive coordinator at Union to coach at Penn, some people said he was heading to a worse situation and that the Dutchmen were not a winning team. But Bagnoli said he took the Dutchmen to the national championship in 1982 and led the team to a 9-1 season and a trip to the Orange Bowl in 1983. He also coached the Penn football team to a 5-4 record in 1990.

In his first year at the helm, Bagnoli and the Quakers are not in the same league as they were in 1982. But Bagnoli said his team will not be satisfied with less.

"We're not going to try to change our offensive game plan," Bagnoli said. "We're getting into shape. We're getting our shoes on. We're getting into the stadium and getting our jump shots.

"It's a matter of taking the shot with confidence, recognizing you're there and not going with that hesitation to the point where you allow a defensive rotation to come in.

By far the major problem is that of inconsistency. However, despite struggling to a 3-9 record, the Quakers are confident that they can overcome it.

"I think we're inconsistent from half to half and definitely from game to game," Bagnoli said. "Everybody gets off to a great start and the defense gets off to a great start and the offense gets off to a great start and then something terrible happens.

"It's a little frustrating to be losing games you honestly feel you should be able to win. But our morale is still good. We know the team is far from over. We just want to get it back."

You can say that again.

Bell Atlantic

The Bell Atlantic-Bell of Pennsylvania Scholars Endowed Fund for Undergraduate Education at the University of Pennsylvania

APPLICATION

Deadline: Monday, February 17, 1992 at 5:00 p.m.

Description

Bell Atlantic-Bell of Pennsylvania, in recognition of the need for specialized work in the field of telecommunications by students who understand its social, political, and economic aspects, and the role of the mass media in society, has developed an endowed fund to support an approximation for the full-time University of Pennsylvania students. The two students — one coming junior and one an incoming senior — will be those whose qualifications and interests best exemplify the spirit of advanced global telecommunications.

The fund will provide $5,000 for each student toward tuition at the University. If conditions permit, internships shall be offered to the scholars during the fall semester of the academic year for which they will receive the scholarship. Taking part in an internship is not a prerequisite for the scholarship.

All full-time University of Pennsylvania undergraduate students who are presently in sophomore or junior years are eligible to apply.

Applications and additional information are available from
