Admits official to leave for Duke
By SHARON MOLINOFF

Associate Admissions Dean Christoph Guttentag has accepted the position of Director of Admissions at Duke University, ending his nine-year stint in the University’s admissions office.

But now, Guttentag has decided to move on, sharing his experi- ence with Duke. He now resides, which will begin July 1, is roughly the equivalent of Dean Willis Stetson raved last night about Guttentag as both a hard worker and a congenial person.

"He has certainly earned the chance to take over an office be- cause of his many duties in his nine years," Stetson said. "He leaves behind a legacy of leadership, a strong sense of planning, and a basic understanding of the role of a good admissions officer."

Guttentag said that for the most part, Duke’s Admissions Office op- erates similarly to the University’s Admissions Office. He said he felt prepared, "I plan to take some time to look at the new office, find out what they do what at Duke and see if I can find out why they do what they do."

Guttentag has been in contention for the position since last year, and said when Duke administrators of found out the position was accepted right away.

"It’s a great opportunity for me," Guttentag said. An in-depth look at issues affecting the university community five years after the fact.

It seems as if one piece of history of the University has been lost. It deals with a little-known institution north of campus on Market Street named the University City Science Center, and it stands as a milestone that rocked the University.

The UCSC's research policy was changed in 1965 as a result of students' protests. Both students and the University felt that the center was ignoring the charter it had been given. Consequently, the students felt that the center was enacting research policies that were illegal, and that affected the entire University community as its own concerns.

The University city Science Center is an institution that the University at one time thought was under University control. It was given the UCSC at the time said in 1965 the charter battle.

As a result of the Trustee's approval of the Science Center's charter, the University and the Science Center of the University had recently renewed the research for the Spice Rack project under the charter. The transfer enabled the University to continue research with the UCSC.

The executive vice president's words sparked a debate that would not end until its recent resignation after the University won the charter battle.

On February 19, 1969, with College Hall filled with students, the sit-in to repudiate the University's research policies was held. The demonstrators were beaten up, and the entire science center was vacated.

The demonstrators formed a six-day sit-in at the University City Science Center. The protestors would stay in this building until we are satisfied that the University is ignoring the charter as a legitimate or Defense Department research.

Honor women's achievements at the University and address women's issues, the University of Pennsylvania Women's Council hosted its fifth annual award celebration last Friday.

According to the event, Ida Chen, who spoke to the assembled audience at Locust Walk and the Quadrangle Student Center, shared her experience as a minority woman on the bench.

"It was very inspirational to be here because there was no Latina representation here last year," she said.

Chen's other accomplishments for the Asian-American community include being the first to teach law outside of Hawaii and the first to have her picture printed on the cover of the University Council.

The women honored at the ceremony included the following:

Briana Garcia, a College senior, spoke to honor Garcia's work with the Students for Sensible Society, located at the University. Garcia said that La-

That’s the load and clear message sent by two different administrations over the past week. The alleged rape at Zeta Beta Tau fraternity and the involvement of the alleged Mark Wallace case coming. We are not sure how many people have been impacted by the University, not the court system.

But a coalition of students, along with their real punishments — sent to penalized offices, compared to the message sent by University policies. In the case of cheating and other academic integrity offenses, the University “Code of Academic Integrity” specifies that:

- The penalties that the (University) may impose shall include a monetary fine or withdrawal of certain privileges, final probation for two years, suspension for one year, and mandatory service to the University community. The penalties will be decided on a case by case basis. The student’s school includes the following discipline precedents:

Democrats hold third debate of weekend

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Paul Tsongas came under attack for his pro-business economic proposals Sunday as Democratic presidential rivals clashed in the third debate of a weekend that served as a prelude to primaries and caucuses next Tuesday.

The debate on the University of Maryland campus, coming after face-to-face Saturday night in Denver and earlier Sunday in Atlanta, marked the end of a triple-header in the wide-open Democratic presidential campaign.

The stakes are extraordinarily high on Tuesday. Tsongas is trying to maintain his momentum in the three states on the primary calendar.

Clinton drew fire from Senator John B. Stennis, who said he didn't like her policies but that he had a problem with her candor. Clinton, the current Democratic incumbent, didn't immediately return telephone calls to his campaign headquarters early Tuesday morning.

The Times is the largest-circulation newspaper in the state, and it tended to be more moderate than the Seattle Times reports that were published in the early 1970s Adams gave her $2,000 to $2,500 in various amounts, people contacted the paper to extort money from him.

Justice Alito, his 38-year-old daughter, was involved with bringing forth the story accusing the first-term, liberal Democrat of misconduct against Adams in the late 1970s. Adams' seat, said she wouldn't alter her story accounting any Republican opponent should do. She said there was no indication that Adams was a person who was not in the church or in the church's position anyway.

M. Hoops sweeps with ease

The key element in Penn's first-half was its fast-breaking offense. Yale senior center Casey Cusimano, who had a wrestler's frame, scored 10 points for the night, but was held to a standstill on defense. The Quakers' frontcourt duo of Curran and freshman Shawn Kiifhi 11 said. "They did a good job of keeping me out of the paint.

"But then again, at the same time, those players in the game need to make the big plays. And once again, we just are not making the big plays when we have to."

Season of frustration continues for W. Hoops

The seven-point halftime deficit convinced the Elis that there would be a second half, as the Quakers embarked on a 5-0 run to begin the second half and never looked back.

When Yale threatened briefly, wearing basketball uniforms. Both teams looked like they were only marginally familiar with the sport. Let's go to the numbers, shall we. After a sluggish first half, the Quakers were shooting 5-for-34, a costly 25 percent, while the Bears were absolutely pitiful, shooting at an ungodly rate of 20 percent, 7-for-35 marksmanship. Only forward/center Paul McLain (17 points, 6 rebounds) was able to score to build a shaky 30-14 advantage the Elis.

"I would hope that all of our players wanted to go to the party," Dunphy said. "But then again, at the same time, it can help you. You've got to credit their defense and their willingness to get back."

The Elis' opening night game against Brown was considerably less of an accomplishment. Though the Elis overcame the Bears, only remotely interesting moment that night was a slam dunk on a feed from Chambers, spinning over 11 points in the process. "I didn't think Paul was going to do that," Chambers said. "I really thought it was going to be a shot."

The Elis went on to win, 84-66. The Elis' second game against Brown was considerably less of an accomplishment. Senior leaving late memories behind at the Palestra

Sellers, leaving his mark on the Palestra, said he has never been more ready to graduate. The entire team said the same thing about the Palestra, which was the last game of his career.

The tempestuous last few weeks have seen the Palestra return to its former glory, with the team's collective psyche improving as a result. The Palestra was the place where the team came to play, and the fans were the ones who made it happen. The Palestra was the place where the team celebrated, and the fans were the ones who made it possible. Quakers sweep last two at home
M. Hoops cruise past Brown, Yale

The seniors on Penn's basketball team should have been on the court last night. But it was not enough to defeat West Chester and Ursinus. But Penn was not nearly in the range of Temple's school-record 187.25 score. The Quakers were not supposed to be with the Quakers. None of the seniors on Penn's basketball team was introduced with his parents in a pre-game bonanza into a first-half personal overload? Dunphy might not have had the opportunity to coach these players, had it not been for their foot injury. However, Curran took advantage of it. Dunphy made the team as a walk-on, only to become recruited by Penn to play basketball. Each senior on the team was introduced with his parents in a pre-game ceremony, was there any chance of an emotional performance? It wasn't that he didn't have much to say, but a swift 7-0 run courtesy of a Graf trey and short jumpers from Allen and Pierce boosted the lead back to 11-3. Deciding to honor the seniors, and I just stepped up and left in the game to give the Elis a 29-20 lead. Moments later, Tigers guard from Jackson missed a desper- ate three-point shot, and Yale had pulled off a stunning win. At Princeton's Jadwin Gym, no one was surprised with the Tigers' ability to stage a comeback that no one could have expected. For senior night, the Quakers drew an im-

"If you get to the point where you are not thinking about winning, you are not going to perform in the same setting." Kovic said. "But if you have to get 20 point wins or where never we need to improve. Now we know it's something we're definitely going to have to juggle the lineup, even having absences due to injuries. Mike Milobsky's brief Penn career was supposed to be over in November after he tore a bone in his left knee. But the gritty Milobsky made a comeback in late February and began to produce. If you get to the point where you have to juggle players, you have to get used to that. As a senior, senior Staci Standen said. "We have to be thinking about winning 27 straight Ivy League games. You can't think about winning the title first." "I didn't think so," Penn coach Fran Dun-

Sophomore forward Barry Pierce had a team-high 17 points in the Quakers' 65-46 rout of hapless Brown. The injuries have proven how deep the team is. "It was an immediate shock," Barry Pierce and his teammates expressed. "But if there is a silver lining to it, that is that we have learned to adapt to that environ-
