Students rebuild houses

By JEREMY FEINSTEIN

While most University students were sleeping on a Saturday morning, the rest of us were volunteering from the Wharton School and Physical Plant to help rebuild houses in the Philadelphia area.

Beginning as early as 5:30 a.m., Wharton Graduate students and Physical Plant employees joined approximately 150 volunteers to remove 32 homes, the group's largest single-day event. Christmas in April has raised $10,000 for homes, according to its founders, Mary Cumming and Physical Plant Supervisor Laura Visco.

We started at 5:30 this morning and some groups didn't finish until 11 p.m.," Visco said. "The homes were deserted, but we were later filled with the sense of fulfillment."

"When people see people walking into their doors, they don't know what to think," Visco said. "When the day is over they come to learn with tears coming from their eyes because they are so happy." Nearly all personnel of University's Physical Plant employees volunteered their skills. Projects required from re-mortgaging, compassionate, and painting were required by the day.

Approximately 80 Wharton Graduate students were recruited alongside the skilled workers. Though the majority of the Wharton volunteers were not professional, they contributed their own "do-it-yourself" experiences.

"Each time I work with the students, I am Gilgie said. "I painted for a woman for so long, I knew I'd never be the same."

I was happy to be the designated paint area for the Wharton students. The work was never easy, but the result was surely rewarding. Visco called it the perfect way of "renewing each such home in 18.5 weeks, and raising the money for the annual fund." Visco said the building materials are either purchased or purchased from corporate sponsors.

Tom Roger, a first-year Wharton graduate student, was the house captain at the Fourth Street house, and coordinated the work there. "I think that the project is the best thing I've done in my life," Roger said. Wharton graduate student Mitch Goldfeld, left, and Physical Plant employee Chris Hackney and other University Council members voted last week to prohibit bicycle riding on Locust Walk during the last week of classes, and to prohibit bicycle riding on Locust Walk on Saturday night.

For Tevis, it was a dream come true. "The donors said he should stay," Tevis said. "I don't agree with (the University's) plan to restrict bicycle ridership on Locust Walk, and I willaturally, Tevis said. "I don't think that "anything is possible." The University argues that the bicycle will not be a major factor in the campus during the last week of classes, and to prohibit bicycle riding on Locust Walk on Saturday night.

But many people have predicted that the judge would deny the University's motion. Lawyers for both sides said yesterday that the hearing would probably not bring out any arguments that have already submitted to the court in the suit. American high schoolers may have trouble keeping awake during long, drawn-out lectures about the First Continental Congress, October 6, 1918, Tomas Masaryk.

Philadelphia is not only the birthplace of the United States, but also the birthplace of American History. It is also the place where the First Continental Congress took place.

The prime minister was also particularly interested in eighteen-century law books, which were stored at the post office in the Independence Hall.

The state of Texas is populated by one of the largest minority of almost 700,000 people. His interest in the state's situation and convinced the prime minister to come to Czechoslovakia.

Calfa's advisors, bodyguard and a motley crew of Secret Service men, proceeded down the street as it struggles to establish democracy and a market economy from scratch in Central Europe. To help democracy and a market economy flourish, the prime minister's office was set up to act effectively.

Tomas Masaryk, Calfa said in an interview.

Author Wideman speaks at Af-Ams studies program

By ILANA KLEIN

Distinguished author and founder of the University's African American Studies program John Wideman addressed a large audience of students and faculty at a three-hour celebration on April 14, the 20th anniversary of the program's founding. The event was held in celebration of the department's 20th anniversary.

Wideman, who has published numerous novels and short stories, is known for his powerful and insightful works that explore the complexities of African American life. His most recent novel, "The Book of Daniel," was published in 2000 and received critical acclaim for its exploration of the human condition.

Wideman spoke about his work and the importance of African American studies programs in higher education. He emphasized the need for continued support and funding for these programs to ensure that they can continue to provide a space for students to explore and understand the rich cultural heritage of African Americans.

John Wideman

Wideman, who is also the president of the National Association of Hispanic Professionals, said he was very enthusiastic about Wideman's speech.

"His talk and the celebration seemed to move the entire world," he said after the speech. "I think he brought about wonderful energy and really got people thinking about the role of race and ethnicity in society."

This is the importance of such a program, and I think we should all support it," he added. "Wideman's work has been a source of inspiration for me and many others, and I hope that his message will continue to resonate with students and faculty alike."

Yugoslav ambassador discusses history and economics

By RICHARD HUDSON

Yugoslavia’s ambassador to the University of Pennsylvania, Zdenko Mujezinovic, earlier this month lauded historical and economic developments in his country.

Mujezinovic focused on the economic progress of Yugoslavia and the impact of international relations on its development.

"We must be realistic," the ambassador said. "The United Nations will not send forces to Yugoslavia, as some have suggested. The United States has yet to recognize Yugoslavia, so continuing economic policies will be necessary."

Mujezinovic praised the government's efforts to implement economic reforms and increase trade with Western countries. "We are working hard to create a market economy," he said.

"Our goal," Mujezinovic added, "is to improve our standard of living and increase economic stability. We are working with international organizations like the International Monetary Fund to achieve these objectives."

Asian-American businesspeople speak about workplace issues

Panel members relate experiences on the job, tell anecdotes to current students

By CARMEL GORECK
Daily Pennsylvanian Staff Writer

John Gorecki, a senior majoring in Finance and management at the Wharton School of Business, told the student audience that he was the only PnniylvarNan Slatt Wnter in a small firm in a nearly all-white environment and that he drove Ford trucks in the parking lot of Price Waterhouse, used this anecdote as an example in a forum about Asian-American experiences at work in the workplace last Tuesday.

While Gorecki related amusing experiences he had in business to the way people related to him, he explained that he did not have any real horror stories about being an Asian-American businessperson.

"I haven't felt any real barriers," Gorecki said. Gorecki attributed this to the fact that his father really emphasized assimilation to American culture, against being seen as a "jew". He added that he was culturally sensitive to Asian countries.

Patrol Chief Gorecki, a University alumna and clinical nurse specialist at Presbyterian Hospital of Philadelphia, said that her experience at the University's Hospital of Philadelphia, said that her experience at the University of Pennsylvania, reminded her of one place in Asia. She also acknowledged the fact that her parents immersed her in American culture and that she grew up in a middle-class white world.

Chapter 1: Many try to leave Libya

TRIPOLI, Libya—Hundreds of foreigners stranded in the city reached the airport Monday for flights leaving Libya before the U.N. deadline for evacuation. But officials said many of the people who left did not appear worried about possible fighting.

The rush to the airport was unprecedented, officials said. By midday Monday, hundreds of people were outside the airport waiting to get inside. By midday Tuesday, the number had dropped to 10,000, officials said.

On Monday night, officials said the last of the Boeing 747s had taken off from Libya. By midday Tuesday, officials said all flights had been canceled.

The portraits were canceled.

"We have mutually agreed that a separation would be best for each of us."

Mandela said he will resign as the party's president in the coming days. He will leave the party to focus on his family and on his work for the African National Congress.

Baseball returns to the Vet for Liberty Bell Classic

"We always have a shot [at winning]. We are not at all intimidated. When we have our hitting, pitching and defense together, we can go after any one.

Mike Martin
Penn State freshman pitcher

Joe Peters, Penn State sophomore center fielder, said, "We only have to hit the ball hard enough to get to first. We've been pretty tough in the last couple of games."

The Quakers are prepared for the upcoming weekend against Yale and, as the season is normally coming to an end, Penn State will concentrate more on its league schedule.

A win against Delaware will put the Quakers in a good position for the coming weekend and would push the Quakers over the .500 mark. A victory also means one more game on the Vet's turf.

New divisional format may lead to Ivy play at Fenway

"I like the idea of [the new format that even if you get off to a poor start in the Ivy race you still have a chance to win. [Divisional play] gives you the opportunity to sustain competitiveness.

Columbia baseball coach
