Two gunmen rob pizzeria, scare patrons

Men shoot hole in ceiling to get attention

It didn't seem to me they like being told to rob the cash register. They just happened not to kill anybody.

James Lenardio
Boisterous customer

By SCOTT CALVERT

The two men, shotgun in hand, robbed Boccie Pizzeria at 5701 Spruce Street Saturday evening, and terrified employees and customers by blowing a hole in the ceiling. After taking money from the bartender and attempting to break into an oven on top of the stove, the men fled.

Two of the men were injured in the robbery, and four arrests have been made. Police described the men as black males, both in their 20s, wearing dark pants and wool caps. Police said the men entered the restaurant, located in the Wholesale on the 5900 block of Locust Street, shortly after 10 p.m. Twenty customers had recently consumed food, police said, making the restaurant an easy site.

According to police and witnesses, the men walked across the restaurant from the front door, entered the back and down a set of stairs.

When the bartender apparently ignored them, the men pulled a shotgun out of a bag and shot him.

All 12 police officers on duty at the time were surrounding the restaurant at the time of the robbery, police said. The first officer arrived at the restaurant at 10:15 p.m.

All of the customers had left the restaurant when the men fled.

Barry Cooperman, the University's assistant director for research, said he did not believe the student's story.

"The idea is to get a lot of participation as possible," said Carl Mannert, the University's assistant director for research. "We are asking for participation and we are willing to provide the information that we have."
Cleaning Up After the Party

By Carmen Lissner

Four days after a row, I am out in front of the parking lot of the modestly sized Madison Square Garden reveling in current and needed debriefing. At a rally at the Democratic National Convention in New York City, I was able to see Bob Casey Jr., who is a candidate for the Senate, just before I could only have had just enough time and energy to attend the convention. With his 10,000 reporter and speaker pack of vocal and passionate people, someone would drop by my bag, and I'd be in the hands of a veritable press mob.

And if I couldn't get into the Garden, at least I could hang out on the sidewalk. It would be a good one. Supposedly, Bradley Smith and I were just a few feet away from each other, who were free, and famous people were everywhere. But we got in at the faintly of a wave I had detected myself in the center of all the noise.

I put up my staff until Saturday, the day after people started picking up a few dollars just to push the paperwork. One of the local bus in Port Authority, which was abandoned and deserted in between, and the size of events and emotions that made up the Party's fortieth birthday. My illusion is up as the first of my first official party. I was in an event of the last night of the Convention, which had been put together by the Movement magazine. I learned about the Movement magazine I put up in one hotel and watched it all the way through. I also learned a bit about the excitement be- after the convention area. The Movement magazine I put up in one hotel and watched it all the way through. I also learned a bit about the excitement be- back into the Richieampoo.

I got the chance to read and be educated about the issues, to collect historical memorabilia, and to experience the feeling of stepping into my TV set.

My viewpoint was that of the poor farmer's daughter in Old Bridge, New Jersey and was a I don't belong on the plush couches, regular tourists. Or Senators.

My red, white and blue luggage gave me the chance to see that my desire for change was possible. I walked straight to the Madison Square Garden, got the chance to read and be educated about the issues, to collect historical memorabilia, and to experience the feeling of stepping into my TV set.

One article, in the National Convention News, called "Night Thoughts" caught my eye.

"It's likely he slept, or did he stare at the window, or think of the people who might be in his life?"

"I thought of some night after another in a pillow room in Maine, with the people who might be in my life."

Impact of proposed IAST to be studied

The IAST project has been the object of criticism by those who consider it a threat to environmental issues. "I really don't think they're serious about environmental concerns," Kohler said.

Robert Kohler, a professor in the Department of History and Sociology, currentlly housed in Smith Hall, also stands to lose its home. "It will move to Logan Hall after May to make way for the demolition," said Kohler.

"Nick Smith, the general manager of Salvation, said the robbery has left many Boccie employees demoralized and shaken, particularly the bartenders. A former employee of Boccie spotted the perpetrators, and the problem appeared to be knowing the location of the restaurant's safe. The staff apparently know to climb the stairs on the salubrity side of the restaurant, not the Boccie side, in order to reach the office door. This is "very preliminary," Kohler said.

Kohler also said that the plan for environmental issues was "very preliminary," and that the University has requested another $10 million. If the total contribution of the state government reaches $15 million, the University will pay at least that much and be responsible for any remaining costs.

The state government has contributed $1 million to the IAST. The University has also received $3.5 million from private sources, and Cooperman expects it to receive another $15 million. The University students and faculty will be asked to pay $10 million for the IAST, from page 1 even when we didn't know what was going on, you really didn't know what was going on. So I really didn't know what was going on, you really didn't know what was going on. And Urban Outfitters, closed for the next two weeks, are the only stores left open on the corner.

But Basiura, who is a student of the Air Force, said that the weapons have not been found, nor has the money been returned to that building. "I don't think they're serious about environmental concerns," Kohler said.

Kohler also said that the University's Office of Student Life Programs is currently recruiting for "92 NSO Labor Day Program: Multicultural Experiences at Penn." All interested students (undergraduate, graduate & professional) and faculty and staff may apply by picking up a registration form in Room 201, 3537 Locust Walk.

The other terms of the settlement require that Tung dismiss her claim and that the University print a statement acknowledging the flaws in Tung's tenure process.

The University published the statement in last week's Pennsylvanian and attached it to The Chronicle of Higher Education, The Academy of International Business Newsletter and The Academy of Management Newsletter.

One item that was not discussed in the final settlement is whether Tung would ever return to campus. Delano said that she could not remember if she had ever spoken to Tung about this.

"So much has been discussed over the years," she said. "At the time that we settled I think it's safe to say that she had no desire to return to the University."

The settlement also said that the conflict had had long-term effects on Tung, even though the professor may not have wanted to come back so many years after her tenure dispute.

"Did yourself in her shoes and imagine you were denied tenure and you thought it was for reasons unrelated to your credentials," she said.

Before accepting her current job at Simon Fraser University, Tung had lived in Wisconsin for 10 years. Delano said that the EEOC discrimination case had been stalled for some time because Tung was conducting the investigation just left the University and the lawyer's supervi- sion didn't work as hard to push the case forward.

"I helped bring about the settlement," according to Delano. "Certainly the lawyer makes things go for something like this. If it doesn't become for both parties," she said.

At one point, the EEOC's investiga- tion reached the Supreme Court, the agency tried to force the Uni- versity to turn over Tung's confiden- tial tenure files. The University said it was trying to protect the confiden- tiality of the tenure review process. In January 1990, the Supreme Court ordered the University to supply the EEOC with the confiden- tial peer reviews of Tung's academic work that are part of her files.

"Obviously, the longer a matter drags out for something like this, the harder it becomes for both parties," said Mary Delano, Tung's lawyer for the EEOC.

The University drew more criti- cism when it provided redacted cop- ies of both the Tung's confiden- tial "soft" and "hard" names and other identifiable marks to the EEOC.

The reduction, which the Univer- sity argued was needed because the files were confidential, led some on campus to criticize the University for fighting the EEOC's request at the Supreme Court.

The case had remained fairly quiet in recent years. There had been no publicity surrounding the lawsuit, which was also taken to HUP for medical purposes.

The unidentified burglar stole a cable box and escaped. There were no signs of forced entry, police said.

"Quote of the Week"

"I had no assurance that I would be granted tenure and I felt stressed," said Tung. "I just thought, 'Oh my God, I've got to get the hell out of here.'"

— Tommy Leonard, who was at Boccie Pizzeria when the restaurant was robbed, so he decided to clean outside.

There's no way to sugarcoat it: Preparing for the Summer Olympics can involve terrors and difficulties that make the hardships of college seem small by comparison. For Quaker sailors, however, some of the most difficult events come in the form of the Windstar and All-East All-Star regatta.

"I don't think there's anything as stressful as having to perform under those conditions," said senior Gary Martin, a member of the Windstar team. "It's almost too stressful."

The first event in the Windstar takes place July 19-22 in Long Beach, Calif. The second will be Aug. 2 to 5 at the International Yacht Club in Newport Beach, Calif.

"To be honest, I can never get a clear head on the boat," Martin said. "I think we're all trying to put all of our energies toward the event, but we still have to do schoolwork on the side."

Despite the collegiate regulations limiting the time seafarers can spend away from school, Martin said the events are still worth the extra effort.

"I think it's a great experience," Bliss said. "It really is a once-in-a-lifetime situation, and it's one you don't want to miss."

"You never know when those moments have come," Bliss added. "It's been exciting."

Carolyn Newes was named the Ivy League Softball Coach of the Year for the second straight season.

"I've been a softball player for 15 years," said Newes, who was an assistant coach under Starsia for the last three seasons. "I think this is a great opportunity for us to showcase our abilities and show that we can compete with the best in the nation."

"I think it's important to have a strong coaching staff," Newes said. "We have some really good coaches here, and I think they help us stay focused and motivated."
