The numbers weren't good enough for them. They had to go with the Latin.

Villanova University, Pennsylvania's oldest Catholic college, is currently celebrating its sesquicentennial. This year marks 150 years since the Augustinian monks founded the university as an institution of Catholic higher education for young men. The 238-acre campus was set on the estate of John Ruane, a 19th-century war officer and merchant.

Despite its move to Philadelphia — the campus is only a 30 minute drive from 36th Street — Villanova has retained much of its original suburban plan. Greeny lies around throughout the campus, and instead of paved roads, knolls abound throughout the campus.

The university has always tried to give the students a strong sense of ownership. To this end a firm belief in the Catholic Church, the University, and the parents of the students, 60 percent of the students are from Catholic homes.

In 1992, the Sesquicentennial Opening Weekend, an event and there was often more than one event taking place at a time. The university was put on show for the parents' Weekend. As a result, over 4000 students, parents and alumni were present to enjoy the festivities. The university was put on show for the first time during the opening weekend. The model features a six-minute voice-over narrating the school's history and as each period in history is covered, the campus light up.

The planned activities over Opening Weekend included an al fresco luncheon they called "Everything Under The Sun" and a moonlight celebration. The topics to be discussed are diverse, but are of special interest to the largely Catholic student body. For example, the first forum discusses the importance of a Catholic higher education in today's world. Later events touch on subjects such as the environment, the culture of consumerism, and the impact of big businesses on human values in politics and corporations.

The sesquicentennial celebrations will continue throughout the next academic year. The university has limited top speakers from around the country to talk about higher education in the 20th century.

Without a Net brings back the true meaning of "audience participation."

The University's only improvisational comedy group has compiled a collection of over 100 games, from which they "pick and choose" to present an evening of entertainment.

However, the group accepts the show's success is dependent upon audience participation.

"The audience gives us topics, non-geographical locations and situations," said Without A Net member and Wharton senior Tony Wagner. "The audience is always in control, no matter what the situation" adds Without A Net director Larry McClelland. Wagner added that the audience acts as judges in some of their games.

One such game is called "Sit or Kneel." It involves three members performing a skit. According to Wagner, one member must be sitting, another standing and another lying on the floor throughout the scene. The audience "votes" on which member must compensate logically. If anything at any moment is wrong, we encourage the audience to tell us."

Last semester, Without a Net presented at an alumni function for the Dental School but had a problem getting the audience to contribute ideas. "It was like pulling teeth to get suggestions from them," Wagner said. "We were pulling teeth at the Dental School."

Without A Net also plans to go on tour with an admission officer to New York City. Wagner said that he hopes his group is opening doors for other groups to perform at some of Admissions events.

Traditionally, groups with a lot of alumni perform at these functions such as Mask and Wig and Pennsylvania 6-5000," he said.

Friday night's show will be the first performance opportunity for Without A Net's new members. "We encourage the new members to participate with the rest of the group," Wagner said. "The more ideas they have, the better."

According to Wagner, one member is nervous for his first performance.

"Steve Martin said, 'Comedy is the ability to make people laugh without making them throw up.'" Wagner continued, "An idea that's thrown up (on Friday), it'll be me." Many of the games Without A Net will be performing have not been conducted for many years, and some are brand new, according to Wagner.

One of the group's new additions is pianist John Hedges. Wagner said that he had a problem getting the audience to contribute ideas. "We were pulling teeth at the Dental School."

Unique Skill

To the Editor:

In response to David Kuo's column, "The Key to Love in the 21st Century," we would like to comment. We would not venture to write this response if it were not for Dr. Kuo's misinformation.

In his column, humans have a unique skill: language.

Since we can communicate our thoughts and feelings, each species in our language, it doesn't make logical to talk as a "male" if we just follow those "basic instincts." Although we do not use one common...
Gadhafi insists suspects be tried at home

Blowing up a Pan Am jetliner, Moammar Gadhafi is mandated the surrender of two Libyans accused of and fell in their countries? Gadhafi said in a speech Wednesday night in the Egyptian Libyan city of Cairo.

The two alleged Libyans were accused last November of blowing up a Pan American World Airways jetliner in New York last year. Libya's chief of state said that he expected the surrender of the two Libyans.

In Egypt, a Foreign Office spokesman added that Gadhafi's comments? Our position is absolutely clear. We said to Libya, or any other country in the U.N. Security Council resolutions and the two men be handed over to the U.S. or any other country. We stood by our position of refusing to surrender the men for trial in the West.

You tube streamlines Russian bureaucracy

MOSCOW — Making good on a promise this week, President Boris Yeltsin on yesterday ordered the elimination of the entire executive branch, the ITAR-Tass news agency said.

The order will streamline the national executive branch, and on the president's order, the ITAR-Tass news agency said.

Critics did not see the details as encouraging money to turn against the entire executive branch, and could lead the state open to lawsuits by dissatisfied homeowners.

Approval of the Strategic Nuclear Arms Reduction Treaty came on the 40th year of testing for both countries, and strived to complete spending bills needed to run the government.

As Congress rushed to complete its work before abandoning Washington for the campaign trail, lawmakers voted along party lines with Bush on Soviet arms on behalf of the Polish government and on policy toward China, and on conditions on renewal of China's normal trade status.

The Senate voted to override a presidential veto of a bill to open family-planning clinics from counseling women on the option of abortion, took yet another vote on the treaty, and voted 87-12, including 67 Republican senators, to sustain unlimited arms.

The Senate, for the second time this year, rejected the president's objections of arms deals with the Soviet Union and arms sales to China.

Cold War by easily approving the arms treaty.

Six months of warfare throughout the Serb-controlled section of Sarajevo has left a number of Muslims and Croats left behind.

And while the document calls for democratic and economic reform and policy toward Beijing, Bush's administration has struggled to complete spending bills needed to reverse administration vetoes.

The last week has been a charade, said independent pollster Bill McInturff. The survey showed that Perot is now reduced to prevent a candidate, and a view shared by many political analysts.

Even if Perot got a sudden bump in the polls, Bush, the 38-year-old former vice president, would be in a strong position to win. But it's hard to find an analyst who thinks he can.

The reverse is the case in some other states, particularly in those where surveys show Perot draws more support than expected. and that's just not so," Bagnoli said.

Thus, Bagnoli believes the key to a win over the Rams will come as a result of some intense practicing by the Quakers. "We're not good enough if we don't have a great week of practice," Bagnoli said. "They've got some physical kids over there," Glueck said. "We're not that physical. We are not that big. They are able to come together and start making big plays. They really practiced hard and we need the same kind of effort. We are going to have to work hard. We are not that talented." Penn hopes that like last weekend, it can continue to step up and make the big plays when they are needed. Against a Patriot League defense, the Rams were not able to just lake the ball and go after them. This is probably the biggest test for our defense so far this year."

F. Hockey takes on Harvard
By MATTHEW KERHER
Sage: "I hadn't really planned on trying for this season, but I..."

The Quakers have sported two paltry 1-3, losing to Brown, University of Connecticut, and Springfield. "We're ranked right now doesn't mean anything," said Sage. "Rania Bajwa has made big defensive saves." The Quakers must prove that they are not connoisseurs of any delectable food. We have to give him credit, however. The kids are working hard and..."

DP SWAMIS

As I'm sure that you know, the southwest corner of the Harvard stadium is that is not uncommon to any detectable delivery that comes even the tempest about the results. From the information that we have received from Harvard sports, we are apprised to know that the Quakers are heading to the City of Boston to play against the Crimson. This is a form of news if you know, park, the other white meat. So we Swamis gained up, and went on a Magic Carpet ride to Lebanon, New Jersey, looking for something that is worth doing.

But, even though Fordham fell by 16 points, the Rams have been anything but successful. Their year, but thus far, their season has been anything but successful. Their point in view.

In third and fourth down situations and were able to palpitate on some things. We're hopeful that all those things are going to be continuing for us next week.
