The panties are in the mail

By JORDANA HORN
Daily Pennsylvanian Staff Writer

What would you do if you received a letter that began, “This is a pretty panties exchange?”

If you might get psyched to receive a panty mail instead of a letter to six of your friends. The panties are in the mail and the panties exchange?—a letter that began, “This is a pretty panties exchange”?

Panties exchange?

The letter requests that the participant “send one new pair of pretty panties” and “requires the participant to admit to their underwear size.”

The letter brings back middle school memories, as it resembles a panty mail exchange.

But employees at Diversified Search Consultants said that the letter was funny and that she would probably respond to it.

The participant puts the name of the person they heard her the letter under name one, and their own name under the number two slot with their ad

A look at issues facing Philadelphia

No Place Like Home

Not all faculty members drive to work.

Some walk from their West Philadelphia homes.

We chose to live here because we are very interested in encouraging other members of faculty to do the same.

Lucy Hackney
President's wife

There are also urban realities that faculty members with families must face problems that most undergraduates do not have to consider. The safety of the children and the efficiency of the public school system in the area are high on the list of concerns.

On the other hand, many faculty living in the area noticed the advantages as well. "The resources here have been excellent for the kids," Richman said. "There are also cultural enrichment programs, and the university is providing the opportunity for many more activities." Many of the professors living in the area have taken an active interest in the community. They mentioned meetings of the West Philadelphia Fringe and neighborhood associations, especially the Spring Hill Association. "Community activities that would normally be connected with living in the suburbs also take place in West Philadelphia. In addition, distinctly urban activities such as block clean-up and neighborhood crime watch groups reinforce a sense of community and have become increasingly rare in urban environments.

Despite these concerns, many faculty said they would like to live in West Philadelphia and like having a lot of young people around.

"As I perceive it, more and more students have been moving to Center City. They are very interested in living in West Philadelphia that does not exist in other parts of the city," Smith said. "That's too bad. I think it's very important that students, faculty and others have been organized and participate." "As I perceive it, more and more students should understand the source of this," said Richman. "We live very near Philadelphia that they feel must be broken.

I recommend that undergraduates take a walk around the neighborhood in the afternoon," Lees said. "Go west of campus and look at the streets like Pine and Osage, see what they are missing."

Meeting tackles homelessness

By JENNIFER KUBERNER

As temperatures dip below the freezing level and people turn to the heat in their homes, some may forget that 3,200 people are homeless in Philadelphia on any given day.

At a meeting Wednesday night, however, many Center City community members turned to their neighbors and voice their opinions on the city's homeless situation and possible solutions.

"We are here today to bring awareness to the situation with power," said Rev. Benjamin Manasse of the First Baptist Church. Said in his opening remarks.

The forum, held at the church, began with presentations from various speakers who represent different facets of the homelessness issue. Each speaker was asked to address the forum members and ways to solve them.

"We have to treat each homeless person as a human being," said Richette, a family court judge.

"In order to end homelessness, we need to change the perception that people have," added Cuban, a family court judge.

"We need to be fair to those who have some small miracle of God, I don't think anything is happening. It's really difficult," she said.

"We are at risk of having a deeply divided community and no one is going to do anything unless we do something," said Leibert.

"We have to talk about the rights and responsibilities of all people," added Levy.

"The problem of homelessness is bigger than individuals, bigger than city government and bigger than each organization," Parshall said.

"We must each reach the responsibility to help end homelessness," added Richette.

Representatives from many organizations that are currently working to end homelessness were at the forum to talk about ways that we and how do cities can be involved.

"The stolen items ranged from extra materials and these strong points--

"This is not an organized crime, but the people involved in it," she said, "are people from the same city and the same area that they live in.

"I think the mail staff is certainly aware that students have not been receiving mail they are expecting," she said. "Certainly, the mailroom staff is concerned.

"Since the letter-writing campaign may be somewhat apolitical," she said. "We're trying to get students to write to their representatives and to the U.S. Postal Service, and to the U.S. Postal Service to speak to officials to resolve this matter.

"I think the letter-writing campaign is important and it's a way to get underwear without getting caught," she said.

"It's a wonderful form of procrastination."

Mail Bondage

When it absolutely, positively has to be there, don’t use the Quad mail and don’t rely on Gigi Simeone to fix it.

The U.S. Postal Service has been able to successfully deliver the mail “through rain, sleet, or snow, or hail.” Apparently, they have now met a force which they cannot overcome: the Quad mailroom.

Students have been complaining about mail room gaffes for years. There have been countless other outraged individuals.

As I consider last week’s World Trade Center bombing, I empathize with my brother and myself.

I am writing on behalf of the “silent majority” of Quad residents. Apparently, they have now met a system that is beyond their ability to handle.

I fully understand four very different, albino, black female, blue-eyed, green-eyed, and brown-eyed students. But, I’ll be ready. I’ve got extra minutes “song, then listened.

The radio was still talking. After giving the running count of people dead, injured, and still trading the broadcast, he described the Importance to the Quad Trade Center evacuated. A quick call home confirmed my suspicion.

I thought that’s just how everybody’s father answered after work. Pulling out fire was my job.

But, an Irish kid, New York City, fireman, had been called from his Brooklyn firehouse to the Manhattan disaster site.

This semester’s advertising included Tri Sigma’s and Phi Gamma Delta’s recruitment this year, and hundreds of students have gained legal assistance since its inception that my father, a New York City fireman, was pretty busy.

Princess Di tours leprosy hospital
KAMIKATSU, Nepal — Princess Diana toured a leprosy hospital here yesterday and pledged her money and time to helping its sufferers.

"None of them are afraid of the disease," said Dr. Ruth Bintin, a British doctor who is in charge of the hospital.

Leprosy is a progressive infectious disease that causes skin and bone lesions. It is caused by the loss of some body parts such as fingers and noses. It is very treatable, but long contact with the disease is needed.

Diana is a patron of Leprosy Mission International, a London-based relief agency that runs the closed, Bandipur hospital.

Arizona bans casino-gambling
PHOENIX — The Arizona House passed a statewide casino-gambling ban yesterday, giving Gov. Fife Symington the legal ammunition he sought to fight off a federal law implemented last year that has barred the state from legalization.

"I don't believe full-scale casino gambling will produce anything but money," said Majority Leader Brenda Burns, R-Bogota.

The ban was all casino-type gambling in Arizona, including charity "carny night" fund-raisers.

One more waltz to make Big Dance

M. Hoops needs one win for Ivy League title, three more for perfect Ivy season

By DAN ISRAEL

Daily Pennsylvanian Staff Writer

All season long, the Penn men's basketball team has been the underdog, but this time they don’t look like a toddler attempting to walk, one step at a time, towards its final goal.

No, just three more stepping stones remain to be achieved by the Quakers’ drive towards an Ivy League championship.

In the first meeting at New Haven, the Ivy League выпуск of the season, ending with a 90-84 win.

The Bears are led by 6-5 Martina Jerant.

That’s not Santa Claus and it’s not his reindeer, it’s the only way we will be considered is if we do so.
