Panel asks how to fix America

By JORDANA HORN

A recent news article proposed to close public schools in order to cut costs. School closures, some of which have already occurred, would likely result in fewer students being educated. How can we balance the need for education and the need for financial savings?

Riverboat gambling may become a reality on the Delaware River.

By JORDANA HORN
Daily Pennsylvania Staff Writer

Riverboat gambling, its proponents contend, would be a priceless addition to the city.

Ted Beitchman, head of the Mayor's Commission on Gambling, said, "In the commission's proposals it is clearly stated that the riverfront is a potential to be realized for gambling coming to Philadelphia.

Beitchman and the 16-member committee are currently examining all angles of the issue, from the "legitimate issues" of pushing the measure through the state legislature to the hotels, restaurants and parking lots that would be necessary to accommodate the casino's anticipated crowds.

For years, the bright lights and fast action of Atlantic City casinos have drawn Philadelphians across the Delaware River - a deal that could pay $2 million annually for the riverfront property.

In the meantime, though, Rendell is reluctant to commit large sums to the riverboat gambling project in Philadelphia.

And if all of this seems like preparation, Rendell said, "I hope riverboat gambling is not approved, because although it would be a gamble in its own right, and would prefer to label it as foresight.

But there are those who don't want to take the plunge into conjecture before the time for questions has been set.

Fraternity's future becomes shakier still

"We haven't exactly decided what we're doing next," said Bixler. "It's hard. Andy Hunt, secretary of the alumni group, admitted that a main factor which causes students to be wary of Acacia is the negative image associated with the fraternity since Acacia was placed on probation at the spring semester break in 1991.

"The chief liability is the negative reputation we're left with," he said. According to Bixler, alumni at the local and national levels will meet and decide whether the chapter will keep trying to find new members or give up its recognition status in the hopes of returning to the University in a couple of years. Bixler said the chapter would probably lose its recognition with only two brothers, both of whom are seniors.

But DST still had to wait for a sexual harassment incident in 1991. Fagin said the chapter would probably lose its recognition status in the hopes of returning to the University in a couple of years. TOWNHALL from page 1

"We hear a lot lately about Penn's problems, and we work on the shared goals of the community - our strengths are important, our weaknesses are important, our greatest assets are important too, and our greatest strengths are important," said Fagin. "The town meeting is a way to bring some of us together so we can work on our future, not be trapped by our past," said Fagin.

Since it is an experiment in new technology, the town meeting's format will be kept fairly simple, which means no free sets will be taken on the air. Viewing rooms across campus will be provided for those students who do not have access to the Internet. The town meeting will also be re-run again at different times during the day for those who missed it at 2 pm.

The town meeting is produced and broadcast entirely by student, staff and faculty volunteers from across the University. "We had no trouble finding the talent and expertise to produce this event," Lazerson said. "There were people all over campus with interest and expertise to volunteer for the event." The town meeting is also being supported by a grant from the Office of the Vice President for Undergraduate Affairs.

Letters to the Editor

In Defense

To the Editor:

Joel Brennberg is obviously an idiotic person. He is also one of the few columnists whose columns I read. This was not difficult to determine the other day when I opened my morning paper and saw his column. He then proceeded to write about how homosexuals are not fit for military service. His ignorance is astounding. He repeats the tired and preposterous claim that homosexuales are not fit for military service. This is an absolute lie. With the amount of research and evidence to the contrary, it is astounding that he would even make this claim. It is not even necessary to provide references or sources to prove this point. It is common knowledge that homosexuals are fit for military service. It is also known that homosexuals have served in the military with distinction. Brennberg's claim is simply a reflection of his ignorance and prejudice. It is unfortunate that people like him continue to make these kinds of statements.

Different Discipline

To the Editor:

I have read the comments of Gregory Park and readers of The Daily Pennsylvania regarding the events of the past few weeks with great interest. I agree with Park that the theses of the Chester A. Brown and the Men's Studies programs are not the same. I believe that the two programs are distinct and that they serve different purposes. The Chester A. Brown program is designed to provide students with an understanding of the history and development of the black experience in America. The Men's Studies program, on the other hand, is designed to provide students with an understanding of the history and development of the male experience in America. These programs are not interchangeable.

By BRIAN PEDERSON

This week's victory over Princeton was the most impressive win of the season for the Wharton football team. It was a dominant performance that showed the team's maturity and talent.

The opening scoring play occurred on a botched snap to Princeton's junior punter. Despite this, the Wharton defense held firm, allowing only a field goal on this drive. The quarterback then embarked on a powerful 15-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver, setting the tone for the rest of the game.

The Wharton offense dominated Princeton throughout the entire game, virtually shutting down their offense while scoring 28 points of their own. The Wharton defense was strong, allowing only 2 points from Princeton's offense.

Princeton fans were left with a sense of frustration as they watched their team crumble under the pressure of the Wharton defense. The score remained 28-6 throughout the game, with the Wharton team displaying a high level of confidence and skill.

This victory was a significant milestone for the Wharton football team, as it solidified their position at the top of the league standings. The team's performance was a testament to their hard work and dedication, demonstrating their ability to perform under pressure.

The decision to return the Games to Sydney was made in Australia for the following reasons: the 1956 Melbourne Olympics were announced live to a worldwide audience; the support of the International Olympic Committee was determined prior to the selection of the committee by the International Olympic Committee; the selection of the committee was determined by the committee's 36 voting members.

Sydney's victory, after unsuccessful bids in 1988, 1992, and 1996, was due to its location in the Southern Hemisphere, which would be the first and all which athletes could live in the Olympic Village, with no more than 50 minutes away.

Heading into the vote, Beijing had appeared the favorite, with Sydney and Madrid, England, being the top two or three contenders for the title of host city, were considered out of the running.

As members of the Sydney delegation, and officials from the Australian Olympic Committee, appeared in the meeting, the members felt that Sydney was the obvious choice.

Despite its beauty and facilities, the Sydney region was faced with a slight disadvantage because of the decision to return the Games to the United States, which could affect any future bidding.

The competition for the Games has been fierce, with Beijing's campaign— an ambitious, controversial attempt to bring the Olympics to the city—determined to win despite the absence of evidence.

When they began the trip to Kansas City, Oakland, and the host city, they played three games, all with a victory on the road against the White Sox and Blue Jays, who moved closer to clinching.

Sydney, with an AL-leading .542 on the year, moved into the lead after winning its 10th straight decision and lowered its major league-leading ERA to 1.41. St. Louis was 10th in the NL with a 5.30 ERA.

The Really Important Facts

- The decision to return the Games to Sydney will cause a $400 million increase in the Games, bringing the total cost to $540 million.
- The Games will be held in the Southern Hemisphere, which will be the first time in which all athletes could live in the Olympic Village, with no more than 50 minutes away.

Quakers can't let up after win

Football travels to Bucknell

By MICHAEL LIEF

It was a non-conference win when the Penn football team defeated Dartmouth last weekend. But the Quakers avenged last season's upset loss to the victorious Big Green, and in the process made a statement that this young team could be seeing some success in Philadelphia.

Football fans bought the champagne bottles just yet, and certainly not the Penn coaching staff. Those kind of thoughts before the Quakers kick off today at Bucknell time-
