Boccie and the other two popular campus restaurants located in The Warehouse at 36th and Locust, still suffer after the campus finals for Chapter 15 // Reading on Monday.

"I did everything I could for as long as I could to avoid taking this step, but I ran out of alternatives," Boccie's assistant owner, Mike Cullina said.

Cullina said the two co-owned restaurants had been struggling, carrying debts from unsuccessful extensions, and at Penn, according to Cullina.

"I was unaffiliated with the University. It will be determined by the landlord, says the worker. This is a blow to everyone, it was a shock to everyone," Burger said despondently.

Cullina said the two co-owned restaurants are slated to close in the next two weeks.

"There was talk about closing, but as a shock to everyone," Burger said despondently.

Man-eating tigers, prenatal health care in Alaska and heavy metal music are just a few of the research endeavors undertaken by the select and cerebral few who make up the University Scholars.

With stipends up to $2,100 allotted for living and research expenses, and the support of a faculty member, University Scholars have rare, and perhaps unheard of, opportunities for undergraduate research. Despite the environs of many University Scholars projects, the undergraduate researchers claim they generally request the funding just to satisfy a burning intellectual curiosity.

Self-declared "metalhead" Ingraham received funding to buy CDs "appropriate for study and to attend heavy metal concerts." Ingraham, a junior at the University of Pennsylvania, said he was able to work on a level of research normally reserved for graduate students.

"The tiger is a very shy creature," he explained. "A heavy metal group which advocated "hearing does large corpora-"" would contradict itself after it was founded. "And it's not that we need to hear, but to experience heavy metal music for ourselves." Ingraham explained.

Although Ingraham felt that his project was "good for a fresh-"man, or even a sophomore, "it was not expected that it would be published." In the future, Ingraham plans on submitting the University Scholars' report, which he considers to be "one of the best moments on campus," to "study of the sex drive of menopausal women."

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

The weekend, like many other loyal Quaks, went down to the Quaker to get season tickets for next year. I was in line for almost 12 hours, 12:30am along with recent arrivals to the scene. I was willing to spend lots of money. I was willing to stand in line all day if I was willing to make the trip up to Penn without purchasing tickets. I don’t know what was wrong with the system for getting tickets in the past but the new system is in the mission.

Last year, I got great seats and didn’t have to meet the pick in the process. Things were going down your year so was your college. I was able to meet my section which was exactly what I did. Despite the fact that Penn has four lines for three there is left to space my body anywhere. I finally went back to get tickets at 12:30am along with recent arrivals to the Quaker. We had just separated from bad tickets at least an hour before I did. I only say that I was every good with the Quaker and the people who were going to be left but I think I have to do what I have to do. I hope all the people who were waiting in the Quaker and workers were doing a fantastic job. I think I have to do what I have to do.

U.S. may boost Japan's defense with missiles

TOKYO — In a bid to broaden technological ties with America's key ally, Defense Secretary Les Aspin yesterday offered to help Japan build a missile defense system in exchange for access to more of Japan's advanced commercial technologies.

Japan's interest in missile defense stems mainly from North Korea's development of ballistic missiles capable of reaching Japanese soil and its alleged interest in developing nuclear weapons, which theoretically could be delivered by missile.

Aspin discussed the issues during a 90-minute meeting today with his Japanese counterpart, Kenki Nakanishi, said that blood tests at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, where the 23-year-old actor was pronounced dead, ruled out an overdose and other medical causes of death.

The military backed out a deal that would have allowed exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to return, and will be forced to return this issue to the U.N., a U.S. official told reporters afterward.

The United Nations insists the accord is applicable, and the military stressed to the Japanese officials that the accord was not limited to North Korea and that it would impose strict conditions on missile deployments.

A recent policy issue that has been a source of debate is the lack of immigration reform. More than half of the immigration task force are opposed to the current immigration policy. The task force consists of senior congressmen and women from both parties. The task force is chaired by Representative John Forbes, a Democrat from Massachusetts.

The task force met last week to discuss the future of immigration reform. The task force is comprised of members from both parties, including Republicans and Democrats. The task force has been working on a comprehensive immigration reform bill since last year.

The task force is currently considering a bill that would provide a pathway to citizenship for unauthorized immigrants who have been in the United States for a certain amount of time. The task force is also considering a bill that would increase border security and enforcement.

The task force is working to find a compromise that can be passed by both the House and Senate. However, there have been significant differences of opinion between the two parties.

Young O-line provides valuable protection

However Priore has also designed the offense so that his linemen would have time to grow comfortable with their roles.

"I think being able to throw the ball took a little pressure off earlier in the year," Priore said. "It is easy to pass block for a young player because the assignments are a lot easier, so that helped them grow.”

"I have the ability to be as suc- cessful," Priore added. "The ques- tion was are they going to work hard, are they going to mentally pick up the game? I think that being able to work hard will take the ball off them in a lot of pressure off them from a mind- point of having to run, run, run, and knock people off the line. That's it. Let them grow into their positions instead of getting backed up and taking some hits.”

"But going into this Homecoming weekend's clash against undefeated Princeton, the linemen are prepared to put a little more weight on their shoulders as they feel if will be neces- sary for Penn to be able to run the game in order to defeat the Tigers. "You know we are definitely going to have to run the ball," Caccuro said. "Princeton is going to be the best front seven that we have faced in far this year. It's going to be a great challenge for the O-line. We're going to have to work hard to block those guys."
We had a general idea of their options on the corners. We were ready for anything, but for the most part we knew what to expect.

Suzy Pures (goalie)

"They had a lot of corners but as soon as we saw that they were doing, we were able to pull them off. Because they would do the low ball near the sideline and instead of having them take a corner, the next day on the post, she would stop." Kauffman said. "We started that, so they started doing the direct shot. That's just a matter of getting out there and trying to stop that."
Parks led Kauffman. The Quakers, for getting out and breaking up the Tiger corners.

"They were quick on their feet, and they have a nice passing game," Parks said. "They really play like a team - their skills are that good."

It was the Penn corner defenders - Kaufman, Parks, and Hecht - who earned the admiration of Princeton coach Beth Brunson.

"If they have extreme good speeding corners, they have extremely good pacing corners," Cloud said. "They really play like a team - their skills are that good."

But it was the Penn corner defenders - Kaufman, Parks, and Hecht - who earned the admiration of Princeton coach Beth Brunson.

"They have extremely good corners," Parks said. "It was a perfect placement. They had a general idea of their options on the corners. We were ready for anything, but for the most part we knew what to expect,"

The Quakers scored their seventh goal of the year on a beautiful corner move. The ball hit the post and rebounded off the back of the net. The Quakers then scored their eighth goal of the season, but despite Mack's two goals on the corner, the Quakers did not get to it together on the field.

"Stopping them down was definitely one of our goals," Parks said. "There's plenty of people on their team who can be shot down, but the key is to anticipate their high corners."
