Morrison steps down as U. Life head

Morrison in the position I to think

Outgoing Vice Provost
University Life

Dr. Kim Morrison steps down as head of the provost's office to become vice president for University Life, allowing her to focus on more long-range planning.

"The provost's office has needed a long-time person who con-continues to care for the University in the manner that provosts in the past have. I'm not here to do it," Morrison said.

"I wanted to do something different," Morrison added.

Morrison said that she had been "in the position for six years, and I think it's time to move on."

She noted that the provost's office had been "the perfect place for me to do the kind of work that I like," and that she was "pleased with the progress that has been made."

Morrison said that she had been "thinking about the future" for some time, and that she had made the decision to step down."This is a good time to make a change," she said.

Morrison said that she was "looking forward to the future" and that she was "excited about the possibilities."

Morrison said that she was "thankful for the opportunity to serve the University in this capacity."
The COMMISSION ON STRENGTHENING THE COMMUNITY invites all members of the University to an OPEN FORUM

Everyone is welcome to offer their views and suggestions for changes that will strengthen communication, respect, and the free exchange of ideas.
Alison Wonderland hits stage

By RANDI FEIGENBAUM

Despite a slow start, Alison Wonderland, first and foremost a dancing, songwriting, performance art piece, came to life last night with the addition of live music. Sponsored by the student production office, the performance was produced by a group of students who were aiming to create a show that would be different from anything else on campus.

The show, which took place in the Annenberg School Theater, featured a cast of dancers, musicians, and performers, all of whom were involved in the production. The performance was divided into two acts, with the first focusing on the themes of love and relationships, and the second on the idea of загадка (a Russian word for mystery or enigma).

Throughout the performance, the audience was taken on a journey through different emotions, as the characters explored their own feelings and experiences. The music, performed by a live band, added an extra layer of depth to the show, helping to bring the characters' emotions to life.

At the end of the performance, the audience was left with a sense of mystery and intrigue, as the performers had not revealed all of the secrets of the show. The audience was left to ponder the meaning of the performance and what it might mean for their own lives.
Pavlik’s Land of Opportunity?

In short, those attempting to come to America are doing so not to replace our Western traditions, but because of them.

Pavlik believes that Western culture is so narrow that it can survive only in the hands of Western Europeans, we would have lost our traditions a long time ago.

In short, those attempting to come to America are doing so not to replace our Western traditions, but because of them.

Instead of working to promote accurate representation, maybe those looking for new officers should devolve their undivided, physical, and intellectual concentration on making our campus as safe as possible.

The anticipated response to this statement, "Well, we're low on European officers," he might respond. "And we're fresh out of Australians." If you have an appreciation for political philosophy, we're going to be more qualified than those selected.

But we're looking for the best security officer, not the best security officer because of his or her background. Any person affiliated with the University is eligible to apply. Make sure you include your affiliation and addresses and phone numbers.

Penn State has done its job. We see our own southern borders being crossed with people from Latin America. Some people feel more comfortable, why not consider attending residential forums, including attending residential forums, and on the plenary Commission. We're going out to hire more of these programs.

The anticipated response to this statement, "Well, good news! For the first time in a hundred years," he might respond. "And we're fresh out of Australians." If you have an appreciation for political philosophy, we're going to be more qualified than those selected.

Grad student paper shuts down

GAPSA eliminates publication because of a lack of interest

By STEPHEN SANFORD

The Graduate Perspective officially ended Wednesday.

The Graduate and Professional Student Assembly passed a motion at its November meeting Wednesday to "completely eliminate" the graduate student newspaper since to date students show interest in reviving the publication.

If the paper returns, funds would have to come through the Graduate and Professional Student Council - instead of directly from GAPSA.

The paper published a total of three issues last year, and only one issue so far this year. Graduate Perspective staffers and graduate students are awaiting official word from GAPSA.

"Unless student government will push to get people involved, I can't see graduate students with enough time and energy to publish it," Judith Bush, GAPSA Perspective staffer, said.

Before voting on the paper's fate, extensive debate focused on exactly whose perspective it should be written from.

Many students said they were concerned that the paper had been simply the voice of graduate student government.

Bush said most people who have worked for the Graduate Perspective were also students involved with graduate student government.

"I'm concerned," said GAPSA will begin publishing a newsletter to disseminate GAPSA information and resolutions now that the publication is officially gone.

While some students discussed the possible creation of a computer newsgroup in which graduate students could read and write about their concerns, most believed a new paper would reach more students. It would be easier for them to read and write about their concerns.

Stevens said her decisions are in accordance with the Joint Statement on Government of Colleges and Universities, the AAUP Administrative Council's Office last month said.

"I feel that faculty have played a meaningful role allalong. But she still forwarded her proposals onto the present relatively unchanged, despite faculty opposition.

Her critics would disagree, however, citing that her move undercuts a level of collegiality at the University and a loss of sight of the academic reason.

Stevens said she expects her proposal to pass come January.

"I feel good about the way that our faculty has handled the very, very difficult discussions, maneuvers and decisions," Stevens said.

When the door opened, a man on his way into the Greek House stopped walking and turned to watch him. He had never been through the Greek House before.

"What did I do wrong? Was it the newspaper article? Was it something I said?" he wondered.

As he got closer, he saw the man who had stopped him. He was dressed in a suit and tie, and he was carrying a book.

"I'm sorry," the man said. "I just wanted to talk to you about your recent article."
U. struggles to cross the racial divide

By DANIEL GINGRICH and CHRIS LAKE

h campus revolves around the theme of seeking harmony among an increasingly diverse student body, there has become a complex and troubling phenomenon in the University's racial relations.

After the contentious incident last year in which the "water buffalo" racial harassment case, the national media turned their interest in the University as an example of the racial tensions many campuses are experiencing.

Under the growing pressure of race-related incidents, student leaders are struggling to find the answers to the difficult and intractable problem of improving race relations.

President Chris Fagen said last night that part of improving race relations is establishing and financing communication throughout the University, especially between groups that have had tensions in the past.

"If you can get people talking, that ultimately is going to pay off," Fagen said last night. "I don't talk enough, there's no way we're going to resolve, no matter what kind of action we take on everything else.

Executive Assistant to the Provost Linda Kienna agrees that increased communication is necessary, but stressed the importance of student involvement in the process.

"There are signs of progress out there that people seem to be more willing to talk about differences and to look for ways to change them," she said yesterday. "That is the only way we can progress.

"For me, personally, to start interest [in the idea]."

"I don't think that you can have that relationship - recognizing that it's every-thing we do is as inclusive as possible."

"The only thing I can do is set up a way of behaving that the [next] generation - namely a contrived living environment that has zeroed in on the University of Pennsylvania and uses a broader education," he said.

"We believe we need to give our stu- dents a broader education," he said.

School of Arts and Sciences Dean Rosemary Stevens said that while the University has been doing specific efforts, they think it would be "ideal if we had a Student Commission on Undergraduate Educa- tion to look carefully at the diversity of the student body.

"There is one of the big themes of the day," Lake said. "We're just incorporating them into the classroom."

M. Squash to battle a ‘horde’

BY JESSE JACOBS

The Penn men’s squash team hopes to battle a horde of three this weekend. Wins over Brown and Amherst will secure a spot in the Ivy League Tournament.

The Quakers face two matches this weekend, against Brown on Saturday and Amherst on Sunday. The matches will be held at the Palestra and the McFarland Pavilion, respectively.

Brown, ranked 9th in the nation, poses a tough challenge. The Elis have won their last two matches, but they face a team that is determined to win.

Amherst, ranked 15th in the nation, is a team that Penn has a shot at winning. The Elis have lost their last two matches, and the Quakers hope to capitalize on their opponents’ struggles.

Penn coach Ned Edwards said: “They’re experienced and they’ve played. Edwards said: “They’re all bad and a lot of experience on junior players. Our team this year is definitely including the first-string all-East performers. Taylor said: “It's a little hard to say how long they're going to last. We have a group of players who could start from the beginning of the season. These players have been a challenge for both teams, but I think they're excited. In order to win, we're going to need one of them to win.”

Junior Vaji Garware returns to the lineup for the Quakers after missing the first two matches due to an injury. With the only possible exception a game back for the junior, he has been a valuable and talented play tool.

For a coach, having many freshmen on the team is always difficult to predict. We've got a group of guys we think will do well. That's the main thing we're trying to do. We've got a great shot at it. Our goals are for them to be as formidable, if not more so, than our seniors. This weekend could very possibly see Penn take a Shakespearean meaning out of the back seat of the Ivy League. Both teams have a shot at winning.

Second team All-American Dave Scharff, Penn looks forward to a possible challenge in the Ivy League. Although experience usually trumps the underdog, the Quakers have a shot at pulling off an upset.

As the world awaits Florida State quarterback Charlie Ward's coronation as the Heisman Trophy winner, the coaches of the Eastern Lightweight Football League were busy inducting players onto the first and second teams.

The coaches could not handle honors unravelling; in the first team, there are no ads of that type available. The second team and third team were voted on by coaches and on-paper team members.

Two first-team spots were given in the third team.

The coaches then voted on the first team's personnel.

The Headliner Greg Baker - who had four sacks, a fumble recovery and an interception returned for a touch-

Livebacker John Grein, offensive guard Dennis Mclaughlin, and defense-defensive back David Sullivan, backfield Todd Williams.

Quakers hope track roles pay off against FDU
PENN travels to face 2-0 Knights

By ADAM KAYE
Daily Pennsylvanian Sports Writer

In the annual Sheridan Invitational Tournament, the Quakers opened the season today at the Palestra with two-time Ivy champions and SCAC qualifiers, and a group of promising freshmen looks to strengthen the team even more.

"We're excited," said senior co-captain Barry Pierce.

In his brief appearances at forward, he's expected to challenge their shooters and get back to the Palestra against Southern Methodist University (12.3) this year. Dasher has posted impressive numbers this season, averaging 14.5 points and 9.4 rebounds per game last year. Pollard has started off strong and four rebounds in the Knights' first two games. Butler and Pollard are the focus of the FDU frontcourt.

Both the Bears and the Mustangs are from Texas, but the Qurakers believe that they are familiar with the style of play and defensive intensity," Penn coach Julie Soriero said. "We expect very physical, quick, and consistent ball handling."

Junior forward Barry Pierce is the top scorer on the team and is off to a great start this season. Last season, he averaged 14.5 points and 9.4 rebounds per game. He will be a key player for the Knights this season.

Julie Soriero, head coach of the women's basketball team, said, "We're excited about playing against some of the top teams in the country.""Butler and Pollard are the focus of the FDU frontcourt," she added.

The Knights lost the opening game of the tournament against Temple but rebounded against William & Mary. They will face Stony Brook University on Wednesday night. The game is expected to be a tough match-up, but the Quakers are confident in their ability to handle the challenge.
