according to Smith. "We're bringing new knowledge everywhere we bring out this building."

The formation of the North American Employee Relations Office has also led to the company becoming more informal and emphasizing a "family" atmosphere.

But there are significant continuing challenges. "General Motors is a global company," Smith said. "We're still building up in the global market," he added. "That's why we're building the future of this!" Smith asked. "Well, we're building the future of this!" Smith added. "The problem is, we've got a lot of people that are like, 'Why do we want to build the future of this?!'

Concert seeks to raise money for homeless

BY BETTY YAAS Daily Pennsylvanian Staff Writer

The crowd of students was looking forward to a break from a long and tiring day, and a break from academic stresses. And the students found all this at the Penn Rocks Against Homelessness show last night.

Penn Rocks, an independent student group formed by the Wharton senior Ted Werth, organized a benefit show last night.

"This group was started five years ago," said College senior Shana Mandelbaum. "But this is the second year we are playing a benefit concert, the Thursday right before Final." Mandelbaum, who is in charge of finances of Penn Rocks, also said that the organization raised a total of almost $10,000 last year, "$6,000 from ticket sales, and the rest from donations."

Ticket sales and donations are expected to match last year's totals, Mandelbaum said. The benefits of the event are reaped by two charitable organizations, which both aid the homeless in Philadelphia. "The money in which has been raised by the Penn Rocks Coalition, Inc and the other half goes to Empty the Shelters," said College senior Tal Kaslner.

Penn Rocks has been so successful that it was invited to join the Board of Directors of Empty the Shelters, Kaslner said.

The money raised by Penn Rocks Against Homelessness will be split between the University City Hospitality Coalition, Inc. and Empty the Shelters.

The How-Tos of the Independent Job Search:

"Since our founding, we have been one of Empty The Shelter's top five donors," she added. "This group has raised more than $14,000 in the history of this concert."

"Groups that we invite play for free, but we do in good expenses for them," she added.

Those who showed up late encountered a huge mass of students that was still waiting to get into the concert. At one point, the crowd became so large that police cars were called to the scene to make sure the mob of students did not get out of hand.

Students said last night that they enjoyed the event and were happy that they were helping a good cause.

Competition Report On Strengthening Spring Fling

Since it didn't make The Almanac, I decided to reprint the "Competition Report On Strengthening Spring Fling." Since the spring fling has been a part of University of Pennsylvania's Comm ativity, The Commission has worked throughout this year in an effort to get the fling to live up to the spirit of the fling. The report includes a discussion of the increase in the size of the University's Community.

Goals for improving the fling:

1. Increase the size of the fling.
2. Increase the participation of students.
3. Increase the diversity of the fling.
4. Improve the coordination of the fling.

Introduction:

When we began our work, it was clear that the fling needed to be improved. We were not sure what the necessary improvements were, but we knew that there were problems to be fixed.

Methodology:

We conducted a survey of students to determine their opinions about the fling. We also spoke to members of the administration and the Student Advisory Committee to gather more information about the fling.

Results:

The survey showed that most students felt that the fling was too small and that it should be expanded. Many students also felt that the fling lacked diversity and that more activities should be offered.

Conclusion:

The Commission recommends that the fling be expanded and that efforts be made to increase diversity. We also recommend that more activities be offered to students.

Hne year ago on this very date, April 15, 1993, the University of Pennsylvania community witnessed an event that would拉开 a process of "social cosmetic surgery." We responded to an effort to call attention to the problem of institutional racism that plagues this campus as well as college campuses across the nation.

Penns received a repudiation of the campus-wide newspaper, The Daily Pennsylvanian. This removal, or firing, was highly visible and not an attempt to silence the voice of the student body. The voice that was first necessary to recognize the most fundamental problem on campus was gone and the words had which we exist as a result of the protest of April 15, 1993, over 14,000 copies of the campus newspaper were humbly removed on that date.

Those who still dwell on the fact that on April 15, 1993, over 14,000 copies of The Daily Pennsylvanian were humbly removed from access points throughout the campus are sadly missing the point of an important message. The issue then and now is not one of free speech. The peaceful political protest that took place one year ago was an effort to call attention to the problem of institutional racism that plagues this campus and to back that voice with the intent that it is not an attempt to silence the student body. As the words of O.J. Lima, my long time friend, have been both an inspiration to me as well as another perspective for the campus. While some may find his views not as a knife, through the course of the year he has presented material that has made one think critically about one's self and one's place in the community.

By Kaplan Mobray

Looking back, Hackney is gone and the words have changed from "diversity and multiculturalism" to "strengthening the community," but there is one major difference. The difference is dialogue.

As he talked about the diversity Penn had reached, which we exist in order to reach and then to be备受 an ideology that is as long as you mention the worthy multicultural, diverse and community in the same sentence, you have arrived as a campus. As the University witnessed on April 15, 1993, just seeing those words was not enough, and Hackney's job was far from complete. But seeing those words in his less than eloquent speech seemingly to say, "the netting got a few new vegetables." As he talked about the diversity, Penn had reached, which we exist to reach and then to be, it is as long as you mention the worthy multicultural, diverse and community in the same sentence, you have arrived as a campus. As the University witnessed on April 15, 1993, just seeing those words was not enough, and Hackney's job was far from complete.

Although there have been proposals like the introduction of assigned housing, which in my opinion might do see their work in their last two series which have proved to be both insightful and complete. Their perspective for the campus. While some may find this view not as a knife, through the course of the year he has presented material that has made one think critically about one's self and one's place in the community.

One Year Ago Today

One Year Ago Today was an effort to call attention to the problem of institutional racism that plagues this campus as well as college campuses across the nation. While the events of last spring may have changed the University community more than good, there has also been what I call a concerted collective collaboration between The Daily Pennsylvanian and The Visors. The two publications have dealt with relevant campus issues in their last two series which have proved to be both insightful and complete.

In this type of effort and work that has been accompanied by recognition and education between particular and me administration interaction said much about the administration's agenda. In a conversation with Interim President Fagin earlier this year, I told her that "the most effective way to reach students is to take the message to them, not to have them come to me, but to have me go to them."

It is easy for an administrator to listen to the students. The challenge lies within the University community to back that voice with the intent that it is not an attempt to silence the student body. As the words of O.J. Lima, my long time friend, have been both an inspiration to me as well as another perspective for the campus. While some may find his views not as a knife, through the course of the year he has presented material that has made one think critically about one's self and one's place in the community.

Finally, the words of O.J. Lima, my long time friend, have been both an inspiration to me as well as another perspective for the campus. While some may find his views not as a knife, through the course of the year he has presented material that has made one think critically about one's self and one's place in the community. So when you think back to what happened one year ago on this very same date, April 15th, don't think of the event, but rather think of the revolution it started.

Mandela, de Klerk meet in first TV debate

WASHINGTO - South African President F. W. de Klerk and anti-apartheid leader Nelson Mandela suddenly shifted gears. He sat quietly and listened as the other side was speaking, but he did not look away. His eyes were fixed on the camera, as if he were trying to make a point to the American people. Mandela told the obviously startled de Klerk during the debate that they must work together to end the conflict and that they will fight for a new non-racial South Africa. The debate was held on television in the United States and was watched by millions of people. Mandela's closing remarks were heard by the audience, who cheered and applauded. Mandela stressed the importance of reconciliation and called for a peaceful resolution of the conflict. He ended his speech by saying, "Let us work together to end apartheid and to build a new non-racial South Africa.

"I firmly believe Penn needs and wants more spirit," he said. "The bottom line for me is, Penn is not a playful enough institution and I love these moments when there is playful enough institution and I love these moments when there is play-

THANK YOU FOR REACHING A STUDENT MARKET WHICH SPENDS AROUND $328 IN DISPOSABLE INCOME TO SPEND, WHICH IS NEARLY TRIPLE THE NATIONAL COLLEGE STUDENT AVERAGE.

The disappointing league record does not reflect how the Quakers have played. In fact, Penn has simply come up short in many close matches. This was best exemplified when the Quakers played Dartmouth last Saturday. The Big Green's facility is one of the worst in the Ivy League. Yet the first doubles team of Davis and Schecter performed surprisingly well in that match. This was perhaps the best example of the Quakers' display of quality play in recent weeks.

The students flock to Spring Fling craft fair stalls

Students are enthusiastic about the craft fair and the beautiful weather. They are excited to browse the handmade items and support local artisans. One student, an expert in embroidery, commented, "I really enjoy the handmade items. Each one is unique and special." Another, a passionate baker, said, "The handmade crafts are a great way to support local artists and to add a touch of creativity to our everyday lives." The event is a wonderful opportunity for students to connect with their community and to find something special for themselves or as gifts for their loved ones. By participating in this fair, students can support local artisans and contribute to the vibrant cultural life of their community.

The outlook for tomorrow's doubleheader is "chancy," he said. "We've got a lot of players out there who are pretty good."

Lomax said the team's record could be 2-0 if the weather had been better.

"When we played in the rain, we didn't do well," he said. "But when we played in the sun, we played well."

The team is scheduled to play at 10 a.m. at Wrigley Field.

Attention Undergraduate Women!

Dear Student,

I am writing to inform you of an important event that is taking place on campus next week. The Career Fair is scheduled for Monday, April 18th, from 7:00 to 9:00 PM in Houston Hall, Room 245. This event is open to all undergraduate women and provides an excellent opportunity to network with professionals and learn about career options.

The Career Fair will feature representatives from various companies and organizations, including the Medical School, School of Social Work, School of Education, Kaplan Test Review, Princeton Review, and more. You will have the chance to meet with these representatives and learn about their organizations, career opportunities, and the skills and qualifications they seek in their employees.

The event will also offer workshops and seminars on topics such as resume building, interview skills, and networking strategies. These sessions are designed to help you prepare for your future career and make the most of your undergraduate experience.

Please mark your calendars and plan to attend the Career Fair on Monday, April 18th. It is a valuable opportunity to connect with professionals and gain valuable insights into the world of work.

Best wishes,

John Chancellor
Vern Briggs and the Penn men's lacrosse team host No. 10 Brown tomorrow at noon. It's part of a Fling doubleheader at Stoppable yesterday at Poe Field. No. 3 Princeton beats W. Lax

BY C.A. MCNAY

After last year's stunning 14-up upset of Princeton, Penn had high hopes before this year's show-down. But the Princeton Tigers were unstoppable yesterday at Poe Field. Princeton remained unbeaten with a 6-0 pounding of the 14th-ranked Quakers. Two of the Princeton home team, the likes of which the Quakers have not seen in years, are set to roll.

No. 3 Princeton beats W. Lax

BY C.A. MCNAY

A year ago, Princeton was the team that was supposed to be the Quaker's nemesis. Penn had a 4-1 lead over Princeton in the 1990 season and was poised to win. But Princeton came back with a vengeance and ended Penn's season. This year, however, Penn is the team to beat. The Quaker's offense has improved significantly and the defense is solid. The Quakers have a chance to make some noise in the Ivy League this year.

Softball splits with La Salle

BY JEFF WHEELER

The day before the Quakers split the doubleheader against La Salle, senior pitcher Kelly McGovern hit a home run in the first inning to give Penn a 3-0 lead. The Quakers went on to win 5-1 in the first game, but lost 6-3 in the second. McGovern's home run was the first of the season for the Quakers and it set the tone for the game. McGovern continued to pitch well, allowing only five hits and striking out five batters. The Quakers rallied in the second game with a two-run home run by freshman catcher Sarah Lasagna to tie the score. The Quakers eventually went on to win 6-3 on a walkoff single by senior third baseman Jennifer Caramella in the bottom of the seventh inning.

Quakers host Brown tomorrow

BY LANCE DECOCK

The road has not been kind to the men's lacrosse team in the Ivy. After dropping games at Penn and Princeton, the Quakers will look to turn things around at home against No. 10 Brown tomorrow. The Quakers have struggled on the field and defensively, but they are still a formidable team. They have two games left in the season, including a matchup with No. 15 Cornell, and they need to win both to have any chance of making the NCAA tournament.

Baseball faces critical series

BY NICHOLAS CURTIS

The Quakers face a critical weekend series against the No. 15 Cornell Big Red and the No. 17 Yale Bulldogs. The Quakers are currently in third place in the Ivy League standings, but they need to win both games to have any chance of making the NCAA tournament. The Quakers have a tough challenge ahead, but they have proven that they can win big games in the past. The Quakers have a chance to prove themselves this weekend.
