Sun appointed to Wharton post

By Daniel Greenspan

Greenfield Intercultural Center Interim Director Joseph Moneta, who offered the new position to the student, announced last November that he would step down on June 30.

Moneta said he was "absolutely delighted" about the opportunity to be appointed to the position. He said he would "look forward to the challenging and important responsibilities in the administration of the university."
A Study in Salvation

We applaud Dean Rosemary Stevens and the School of Arts and Sciences for deciding not to cut the Religious Studies department.

One of the greatest strengths of a large university is the wealth of academic op- tions available. Any time a department can be narrowed or even cut is a waste of the whole institution's benefits. Specifically, the Religious Stud- ies department contributes a unique and important dimension to the well-rounded educational experience available to students.

Unlike studies at Johns Hopkins, the Religious Studies department at Penn is not simply another course offering. The school as a whole is responsible for the societal ills that Mr. Maddow has highlighted in his recent column. I expect letters of sympathy to flood the Independent, attempting to console me.

College women drink more, study reports

BY DANIEL GINSK AND PETER MOORE
College women drink more than men, according to a new study released earlier this month.

The National Commission on Alcohol Abuse and Prevention, universities, at Cornell University, found that the percentage of college-age women who drink has doubled since the late 1980s. The study also found that the percentage of college-age men who drink has also doubled, but at a slower rate.

Dr. Chris Annas, professor of public health policy at the University of Alabama, said the increase in drinking among college women could be due to a number of factors, including the availability of alcohol, peer pressure, and increased access to alcohol on college campuses.

According to the study, college women are now drinking at a rate that is comparable to that of college men. This is in contrast to previous studies that showed that college men drank more than college women.

However, the study also found that college women were more likely to binge drink, defined as consuming five or more drinks in a row, than college men. This is a concern because binge drinking is associated with a range of health problems, including alcohol poisoning and sexual assault.

In response to the findings, University Police Commissioner John Ripple said that the university would be taking steps to address the issue of binge drinking among college women.

"We have been aware of the problem for some time," Ripple said. "But with the results of this study, we see that we need to take it seriously and develop a comprehensive strategy to address it."
"Einstein's Dreams" chosen for Penn Freshman Reading Project

by Bill Wyner

The book Einstein's Dreams, written by Massachusetts Institute of Technology Physics Professor Alan Lightman, will be the centerpiece of the 1994 Penn Freshman Reading Project.

The book is the fictional story of a series of dreams the physical Albert Einstein had about the nature of time, according to Christopher Dennis, director of academic programs in residence and a member of the selection committee for the project.

Dennis said the dreams in the book range from what would happen if time traveled to the differences in time experiences between people living in subarctic life in the mountains.

"Einstein's Dreams combines literature and science in a particularly interesting way," Dennis said Tuesday. Dennis added that the reading project "provides a gateway into literature and science for first-year students, introducing them to books that are of interest.

The book was chosen from a list of 258 books suggested by University faculty and students through a poll published in the April issue of The Daily Pennsylvanian.

"The committee didn't want to limit the reading material to science and literature," Dennis said. "Einstein's Dreams is adventurous, controversial and thought-provoking — it will bring people together in a discussion period that will follow."

The discussion periods will be held on a Sunday this year to avoid conflict with the Passover/Spring Holiday and will correspond with the Jewish New Year.

"We thought about the reading project's book selection generally for a long time," English Department Chairman John Richetti said.

Unlike other books read in other Penn reading projects, the author of "Einstein's Dreams" will be on campus for at least two weeks to answer questions and discuss the book.

"He's a big enough name to bring in a lot of attention," Richetti said.

SUMMER TIMES CHATS WITH ARICHIE MOORE AND BRIAN NELSON OF VELVET GIRL ABOUT THEIR NEW ALBUM, AND THOSE GLASSES

By Mike Tuhy

Velvet Girl originated out of diesen- ced by respected college folk. After all, the band really didn’t know how to play them...or when, the first they started; but, as result of a few new music and nothing really achieve. After a school-like party and another party, the band was fortunate enough to record an album...but not until recorded their first release. Combining solid pop structure composition, the band’s defining characteristic of bands such as the Lasch and My Bloody Valentine, the band has helped define a new style of music which could be defined as the East Coast. But don’t confuse Velvet Girl with the East Coast. After all, a band like the Beach Boys music is more rock and roll, while such bands as the Cars are far from the pop element. The result is a sound of candy songs, but with songs with enough distortion and drum beats that are a bit too much like the Edge. And it is precisely this “wacky” sound, so many calling it “garage rock. But also, guitarist Archie Moore, though some- what reluctantly, that is quite enjoyable to listen and, of course, the band's latest album: "New Face New Bar- s". That these two bands are considered the two top rock bands at the current time. The band is considered to be quite tight, but you can never be quite so. The reason is that people are sick of them...and it make sense. "It’s great, but I’ve had it, you know?"

BY MELISSA GRUNDON

When the Spin Doctors went Top 40 with Pocket Full of Kryptonite in 1993, everyone thought they were onto something because their music was so dif- ferent from the mainstream. Instead of screening guitars they had just been home. Instead of high- ly polished vocals they had Chris Barron’s thick specs, “a friend of mine gave me these and said they would work for me better. I never thought I would wear glasses, people might as well think I had it.”

The album's first single, “Cleopatra's Cat,” is one of the many songs that are memorable. Despite the length of time, the group is still excited about its upcoming world tour. The group's music was so different from the mainstream, people would say, “you know, they're kind of different.”

The album's second single, “Pocket Full of Kryptonite,” is also a standout. The song is about the feeling of being different, of being on the edge, of being unique. It's a powerful song that speaks to the viewer. The music is so good that it's a toss up as to whether or not the band should have a different category. The album's third single, “The Sound of Silence,” is another standout. The song is about the silence that surrounds us. It's a haunting song that speaks to the viewer. The music is so good that it's a toss up as to whether or not the band should have a different category.

Mix resigns as M. Laux coach
4-year coaching career ends

By James Friedman

Former Penn lacrosse coach G.W. Mix resigned from his position Tuesday, and a search committee to find his replacement will begin immediately.

"I think it's time for me to move on," Mix said. "I've had a great deal of success here and this is a great deal of personal and professional change."

Mix has served as Penn's head coach for the past four years. During his tenure, Mix guided the Quakers to a 15-4 campaign in 1993, the most wins in Penn lacrosse history.

"I wanted very hard to keep the Penn lacrosse program at a high level," Mix said. "I want to be able to compete in the Ivy League.""Mix resigned from his position Tuesday, and a search committee to find his replacement will begin immediately.
