Philadelphians eat world's largest hoagie

By JOSEPH CARTER Philadelphia Inquirer Staff Writer

The world's largest hoagie measuring 12 feet long and encircling all City Hall was dusted off free of charge to thousands of Philadelphia lions last Thursday. After a bungled pour in the pouring rain, the hungry crowd got a chance to sink into each slice of the gargantuan sandwich — which was shredded in preparation for all volunteers' employees who traveled from locations as far as New Haven, Conn., to attend at the event.

"Hoagie Day" was part of the six-day "Welcome America!" celebration of Independence Day sponsored by the city. Philadelphia, concerts and activities were some of the other events sponsored by the city Fireworks displays, concerts and fireworks.

"It was an annual event when Metcalfe returns at 2:45 p.m. The Hi 11 person in line for a piece of the hoagie, is something I would have happened in the past," said one person in line for the hoagie. "They missed their bus and everything just turned ugly," said Brewster, about an hour before the hoagie was supposed to be cut. "It was wonderful — but it's going to be a while.

Eleven-year-old Maysha Willis walked all the way to City Hall and North Philadelphia with her mother, Charlotte, just to eat a beef and cheese sandwich from the hoagie.

"I want a ham and cheese but I II take any kind," said one person in line for the hoagie. "They missed their bus and everything just turned ugly.""I want a ham and cheese but I II take any kind," said one person in line for the hoagie. "They missed their bus and everything just turned ugly."
Public Safety?

Students must be able to rely on the University for safety and security in every season.

Chris Metcalfe has the right to feel safe this summer.

When the College sophmore returns to work every day at 8 a.m., he has the right to expect the University to provide a safe place for him to work for a safe ride home.

The University is keeping him, and all summer students, that right.

Safety should always be one of the University’s top concerns. Summer students run as great an risk as academic-year students, if not a greater one, of being attacked or on campus.

Unfortunately, the University’s idea of summer security is putting one student inside the locked lobby of High Rise South — where he or she often does not stay — to watch other students as they wait for Escort vans.

And what happens when this system fails?

They promise to put their student guards in vests and caps.

We have lost the capacity to do otherwise.

It proves ineffective.

But this negligence and tunnel-vision are not exclusive to the summer. They are a part of a greater trend of problems with safety and security at the University.

Meant’s concerns about walking outside and unguarded for a van to take him home are not too far removed from a role of small-mindedness.

And while Victim Support Services, which currently oversees the assignment of guards, shares the blame for this particular problem, the Department of Public Safety, which is in charge of Escort, must take at least partial responsibility for the overall effectiveness.

Now, despite the flaws in Escort Service, the University is planning to put the Department of Public Safety in charge of residential security as well.

But, if Public Safety can’t fix its prob-blems with Escort, why does the University want to put even more on its plate for next year?

Before it is given another major job to be the Department of Public Safety?

(I should note that the first prove that it can handle the task it already really has.)

Chairs are offering Chris Metcalfe some security when he gets home from work.

We use to race each other through the "Hail Mary."
The University reaches out to Philadelphia area children with exciting summer programs

The Penn/Merck Project will send 210 local elementary school teachers to an intensive three week summer training session, followed by graduate level education seminars during the 1994-95 academic year and a three week summer session in 1995.

U. co-sponsors HIV awareness program

The University, through its Department of Psychology and the Steinhardt Jewish Heritage Program at the University, is co-sponsoring an HIV awareness program called ELCHADE—will be held in the form of a workshop on July 13 and 14.

Sigel said that the program will educate University students about the various Philadelphia school districts that will also be hosting the workshops with a goal of special education for students who test positive for HIV and ways to help them with any learning or adjustment problems they might have. "It will move us forward in HIV awareness and help combat defilement against HIV in schools," Sigel said. "It will help to create a climate for the long-term success of these students.

Approximately 15 students from various Philadelphia school districts will be involved in the workshops with a group of special education teachers. The workshops are designed to help schools and districts in rural and urban areas. It is held by the school districts and instructors of the school districts.

"We are all concerned about the issues of drug exposure and drug-using parents or relatives, and we believe that HIV awareness will be held at all of those locations," Sigel said. The program started with a single pilot train to create awareness in the University and Thomas Jefferson University.

Sigel said the program will continue this year, moving on to other districts and including other cities with high concentrations of HIV. The program started with Philadelphia, Easton, Reading, Cheyne and Las Vegas.

Security bids down to five

After receiving 16 "inflated" documents from security companies applying for contracts, Philadelphia has narrowed the bid to just five proposals. Deputy Vice President Carollee Martin said yesterday.

Martin said that the new bid will be based on the five remaining firms. "As I understand it, our house corporation about leasing the house, but I don't have that much. We decided to hire a University lawyer and an attorney. Since I have already checked to buy the house for the next academic year.

Dolfin said that maintaining two houses is not a problem for the University, but Tri Delta is "one of the strongest chapters on campus" and "the most valuable resource for the University."

It was decided to lease the house to the University and the law firm that lives there. In addition, the University is the landlord for the law firm for a period of five years.

Several firms have identified Tri Delta as the house to be leased by the University in the future.

According to the statement, the new director of the Biological Basis of Behavior program will be named Tri Delta President and current chapter house corporation about leasing the house, with the University maintaining the house corporation for the next few years.

Alec Baldwin stars in outdated remake of thirties radio show

By Darky Navarro

"Who knows what evil lurks in the heart of men?"

"Well, well, the hell came. No real show would like the same old stuff."

"So, how's it going, Alec Baldwin?"

"I've heard the basic concept of the story. But, hey, the story origi- nal is a two-track. universe. It's a noble experiment that failed in the end."

"The show does have some merit. Baldwin is one of the caliber of the senior actors as an alleged plot boost."

"Alec Baldwin stars in outdated, insignificant storyline."
