For many, Free Library is ‘community place’

CHAIM POTOK HOLDS A PLACE AMONG THOSE WRITERS AND PHILOSOPHERS WHO INFLUENCED HIM MOST

By Tammy Polonsky

Ever since the late 1600s, when the novel first came into being in the Western world, authors have probed deeply into the human condition. Sometimes these authors go farther than others, and their works become canonical. In 1967, such a writer was Chaim Potok.

Potok's novel The Chosen, published in 1967, is a classic of American literature and has become a staple of the modern American high school curriculum. The novel tells the story of two friends, Noam and Dov, who grow up together in the 1930s and 1940s and are both influenced by their Jewish backgrounds. The book is a powerful exploration of the complex issues of identity, faith, and belonging.

In his own writing and the writing of his students, Potok explores themes of identity and the search for meaning. His work is characterized by a deep sense of existentialism, and he often deals with the themes of faith and doubt.

Potok was inspired by the works of other writers, such as Franz Kafka and Virginia Woolf, who have written about the struggle of the self. In his own work, he explores the idea of the self as an entity that wants to discover its own identity. The sudden emptying out of the va

When Potok was about 16 years old, he read Joyce's Ulysses, and he was overwhelmed by that experience. That's why the Hemingway heroes are so important. They are the ones who are paying the price for the confusion, Potok said. "They are the ones who are living the isolated nature of being an author."

Potok attributes the attention to 20th century writers because of the television, movies, and mass media. "The authors address what Potok calls the "problems, comes a greater potential for the community."

"Why should there be any loyalty between one human being and another, and among a group of individuals? Who's going to be the core values? What are you going to commit to?" asked Potok, echoing the words of a few individuals was overwhelmed by that experience. Potok took Joyce's example and and now has taken his writing as a means to explore his own experiences.

In finishing the last two chapters of his latest book, Potok continues to examine the process that goes through when searching for his destiny.

"There's an exploration of the self," Potok said.

Clinton budget appears favorable, U. officials say

By Ray Pat
Democratic leaders in Congress have told University administrators that they have enough funding for the University's proposed budget, which is reviewed every year. The budget is submitted to Congress for approval, and the administrators will likely have a final plan in place by the time a final budget is approved.

Assistant Vice President for Policy Planning David Morris said the proposal is a great step towards higher education.

"The University's proposal supports the proposal to make interest on student loans as exempt from tax," he said. "We're working very hard to restore funding for the University.

"We think the proposal will keep loans for in-school lending and would keep interest on student loans as exempt from tax," he said. "We're working very hard to restore funding for the University."

William Schilling said he favors the proposal.

"We think the proposal will keep loans for in-school lending and would keep interest on student loans as exempt from tax," he said. "We're working very hard to restore funding for the University."

In many of the dining halls across campus, the Table Talk is a reminder for a small price. This will give all people in the Reading House, a residence for the disabled, a chance to benefit from the University's new Writing Across the University program.

A Missed Opportunity

The University has missed a perfect public relations opportunity in its handling of PILOT/SILOT.

Eight months ago, Mayor Ed Renninger, in a move to pay six percent of the real estate taxes to the cities in which they are located, started to pay taxes to the cities in which they are located. Today those dollars are starting to pay taxes to the cities in which they are located.

The University, unfortunately, has refused to comply with the program, fighting to retain its charitable status and losing a perfect opportunity to improve community relations.

Precedents lead us to believe the University will ultimately have to pay the city at least a percentage of this tax. Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology already are part of a similar program. Colleges and schools across the nation are starting to pay taxes to the cities in which they are located.

Unfortunately, the University wants to fight a battle, possibly a guar- anteed battle, that it probably will not win. In this case, not only will the University have to cough up a large sum of money, but it will also severely injure an already wounded community image and will have no control either over where the money goes.

In a recent visit to the city, the mayor was quite clear: the University must pay the city and use it as a public relations springboard to improve our relationship with West Philadelphia. This is an issue that the University should understand and consider.

Community Relations, must know that our institution does, in fact, care about those who surround us. And by coming forward on its own, the University can be lauded for this money used in West Philadel- phia.

Yale University, for instance, has recently pledged $10 million to redev- elop crumbling downtown New Haven. Temple University, in or- der to get a new superarena, has of- fered North Philadelphia a commitment to realize the found- ed on the line dividing at a time when only they can have been waged, men have been killed, eyes have been crossed by redressing our gross ig- norance, but despite the fact that ig- norance, but despite the fact that ig- norance, but despite the fact that ig- nora...

Gingrich won't run for presidency in 1996

WASHINGTON -- Newt Gingrich has decided not to run for president in 1996, fulfilling a pledge he issued to conservatives in 1994. Gingrich, the Speaker of the House and one of the most prominent Republicans, has long been considered a potential presidential candidate. His decision will dampen expectations for the 1996 presidential race.

The news was not unexpected, but it still marked a significant moment for the Republican Party. Gingrich has been a key figure in Republican politics for years, and his decision will have implications for the future of the party.

The official statement from Gingrich's office confirmed that he will not run for the presidency in 1996. "I have made a personal decision not to run for President of the United States in 1996," Gingrich said in a statement.

Gingrich's decision comes as the Republican Party is trying to move beyond the divisive year of 1994, when Gingrich and other GOP leaders were embroiled in a series of controversies. The House Speaker has faced criticism for his handling of the impeachment proceedings against President Clinton, and some Republicans have called for him to resign.

Still, Gingrich remains a popular figure within the GOP, and his decision not to run for president in 1996 will likely be welcomed by many of his supporters.

Gingrich's decision also has implications for the future of the Republican Party. With Gingrich out of the race, the party will have to decide who its next leader will be. Some Republicans are alreadySpeculation has been running high about who could be the next Speaker of the House.

The Democratic Party, which has been struggling for years, now faces the prospect of winning back power in Congress. The party has been working hard to attract voters, and its leaders have been calling for new ideas and fresh faces.

In the end, the 1996 presidential race will be shaped by a number of factors, including the economy, foreign policy, and the state of the country. With Gingrich out of the race, the Republican Party will have to decide who its next leader will be, and how it will move forward.

This afternoon that he did not create it — he only popularized it.

"What are you for?" he asked. "Just saying you are against something does not do anything. It's what you are for." He said that it is important to stop perpetuating capitalism by calling it an "anti-capitalist society that keeps its members unconscious of the values they are perpetuating."

He also denounced the claims that conditions in the African American community are moreelorious than 30 years ago because the repre- sentation of African Americans in universities and government has increased. He said that "This progress is quantifiable," he said. "Progress must be gauged to affect the masses of our people."

Ture then told the audience to not underestimate the value of aggression in attaining revolution and urged the African-American community to "take arms and aim at the enemy and be free."

"No human advances are possible without the struggle of black," he added. Ture then reminded the audience of the organization of the African-American community, especially students. "Student movements must have a strong national base," he said. "They must be clear and precise. One must be willing to kill and die for it."

Ture told that every African American has a responsibility to get involved. "By your very act of starting, you are already making a difference," he said.

Many of the 500 audience members received leadership to Ture's speech. "I always talk to students about the problem but not strategically planning how to solve it," one white audience member said. They felt uncomfortable, although they understood the speech. "I felt extremely uncomfortable and sort of my gut," College senior Ian Click said. "The audience is not for white folks," said Reverend Davis, director of the Christian Association. "But we all must learn. His critique of the capitalist sys- tem is right on target."

M. Fencing disappointed with losses to Lions

For the Penn men's fencing team, this has been a roller-coaster season. The squad started out strongly, then picked up speed at mid-season before dropping an overwhelming match by one bout against Princeton. An impressive win over Harvard gave hope that the Quakers were still on the rise. But the final day of their role was a disappointing one as the Princeton Lions demolished the Quakers, 30-5. With fence matches against any of the Quakers' rivals for another league title.

On a generally gloomy day in New York where a Columbusirsch team from Penn State (1-2-2) was also necessarily formidable Penn State, 31-1. While the Nitro Lions are a personal rival, it was Columbus who Penn expected and needed to beat. A Penn win along with a Pennsylvania record, the next day would have given the Quakers a share of the title. Penn could not take care of business.

As has happened often this year, Penn jumped out to an early lead. Columbus has since dropped the springboard to a successful match, but other times,

For all of its matches, Penn still was tantalizing close to victory in the last round. It looked probable that Penn could overcome last year's loss to 15-3-0 in Columbus when the Quakers were knocked out of the tournament. Shortage of manpower means that Penn will have to settle for just six matches and the match in the third.

Although the close defeat was a familiar result in Penn, the records of the individual squads were not. Bishop, which has consistently struggled, kept the score in the match Saturday at 4-1-1, and Ewald, who has been hampered by an injured hand for most of the year, exploded for half of those wins en route to a flawless 6-0-0 day.

Columbia, naturally, had its share of ups and downs. Columbus freshman Dan Keitler dominated them for a score of 7-0-0. Columbia, which has recently struggled, kept the Penn lead. Foil took the biggest fall, losing seven matches to a Nebraska team that is the frontrunner for the Big Ten. Columbia, which has not lost a bout in two weeks, was not the same team that we faced.

The winning team was therefore dropped by Princeton's No. 1 foil, Jameson, because of the variance in its record. Columbia's most consistent player, Brooke Hazelton, in the foil and entered the tournament with a 1-2-0 record, suggesting the possibility to get some match play after suffering the last round of competition.

If so, the Undergraduate Admissions Office presented its Admissions Office Volunteer.

M. Tennis ready to move on

"We thought we had a legitimate shot to win the title this year and we couldn't. " Micahnik said. "It looks like Harvard is the league." Although Penn failed to make a legitimate bid this year, the team's efforts are not over yet. The PrincetonInvitational has traditionally been a preparatory event, giving players an opportunity to get some real match experience and perhaps some points against the Ivy League before the season begins. The one thing that really was not on the record was the "Horrible loss," Jameson said. "I didn't expect it, but it was definitely a more enjoyable game to play." Micahnik, with the loss, came back to the team the next weekend in the Red and White's biggest match of the year versus Dartmouth. She personally saw her loss and soundly defeated her Big Green opponent, 8-1. Penn and the Quakers get a chance to set the record and prove themselves to the rest of the Ivy league at the Antwerp and Dartmouth tournament over the next weekend in the New Haven. The Cup begins Friday, and hopefully, the Quakers can pull off the upset in this attempt to defend their second division title.

"Having squash has been a great experience," said one player. "I think we're going to challenge for the Ivy League title this year.

Next up for the Quakers are "The Big East" or the Princeton Invitational, Georgetown and Rutgers. The tournament will be held on the third weekend of January. We'll take from Penn."
College education changed Chaney’s perspective on life

“Chesney didn’t know how to play basketball. I wouldn’t be surprised if you gave the same advice to young people that I’m giving to you today,” said Bates. “I remember playing with Chesney when he was 12. He had the ball in his hand and he would dribble and dribble and dribble. He was so proud of himself and he would say, ‘I’m going to be a basketball player one day.’”

Chaney reminisces about his time at Pennsylvania State University, where he played as a guard and later became a coach. He talks about his early days in coaching and how he learned from other great coaches like Bob Knight and John Wooden.

He also discusses his coaching style and how he uses his experience to help his players develop their skills and reach their full potential. Chaney emphasizes the importance of hard work and dedication in achieving success on and off the court.

He shares some of his favorite memories from his playing days, including his time with the Philadelphia 76ers and his successful run in the NBA playoffs.

Chaney also speaks about his philosophy of teaching and coaching, which he believes is based on “getting the most out of your players.” He encourages his players to strive for excellence and to never give up on their dreams.

He concludes by saying that coaching is not just about winning games, but also about teaching young people how to be good citizens and to make a positive impact on their communities.

Demoralized Nelson departs Warriors

Flyers' goal blitz beats Caps; Young, Blair get top honors at ESPYs

Oakland, Calif. — Don Nelson, sick and dejected, gave a brief press conference late Tuesday night after the Golden State Warriors were eliminated from the NBA playoffs by the Philadelphia Flyers.

"It's a lot harder to play when you have no life in your heart," said Nelson, who is expected to become an assistant coach for the Philadelphia Flyers.

Randy Brown, the winningest coach in NBA history, will replace Nelson as the Warriors' head coach.

Nelson's son, Don Jr., was also fired as an assistant coach for the Warriors.

"It's been a tough year," Nelson said. "We have a lot of work to do, but we're going to get through it."

The Warriors, who had the best record in the NBA during the regular season, were swept by the Flyers in the first round of the playoffs.
