Representatives put Rodin on the spot at appropriations hearing

As a test case, Rep. John Lawless (R-Monroe) pointed to Temple University President Peter Lieberman, who recently said he will take a five percent cut in his $250,000 salary.

Rodin told the Committee that for their approval of $250,000 salary, he will take a five percent cut in his salary, saying: "I will work very hard for it." Rodin said, citing higher expenses, including teaching hours per week in the classroom and three hours seeing students in their offices — in addition to countless hours of course study and preparation. Lawless said he does not begrudge academicians their high salaries, but they should work harder to receive them.

"I just think that we can reduce expenses and bring things way down with out of last professors, by asking each to teach one more class," he said, adding that she would have been awarded a "generous," explaining that it was set by "merit" and "what the Board of Trustees based on what former President Sheldon Hackney earned two years ago."

However, Rodin's salary is the second highest in the Ivy League — behind only Columbia University President George Steiner, who has been on the job one year longer than Rodin, at $250,000.

A look at issues facing Philadelphia

The Peabody of City Hall

BY JOSH FINEMAN

Four years ago, Philadelphia Mayor Ed Rendell crossed the front page of the Philadelphia Inquirer in a photograph which pictures him on his hands and knees scrubbing a City Hall bathroom. It was a political symbol for the mayor who, since 1978, has been working to get the city back on its feet, the photograph of Rendell circulated around the country and helped Rendell earn his reputation as "America's Mayor." But what was a political symbol became a reality, as the aging building needs cleaning and repairs, inside and out.

America's Mayor has begun working in a building which many have characterized as dated, dilapidated and otherwise in desperate need of repair.

Under Rendell, with the city in the best fiscal shape it's seen in years, Philadelphia's City Hall is soon to get its needed renovation.

City Hall so far has received $10 million dollars for a renovation project that could last between 10 and 12 years.

But when the renovations are complete, Philadelphia and visitors from around the world will be able to finally see the building's white marble, instead of the gray, pigeon-encrusted facade now seen.

Karen Butler, executive director of the Mayor's Action Committee, said the change is a real shame that it hasn't been maintained over the years. "It's a sad thing that city hall had been allowed to get this stage," she said. "It is a real shame that it hasn't been maintained over the years."

Butler blamed deferred maintenance and deferred maintenance and weathering.

"It's a sad thing that city hall had been allowed to get this stage," she said. "It is a real shame that it hasn't been maintained over the years."

The building, which pictures him on his hands and knees, has come to the rescue.

According to Butler, restoration begins with the northeast corner and moves around clockwise, allowing restoration to be done in phases.

"For a while we were the tallest occupied structure in the world. For a while we were the tallest occupied building in the world," Rendell said. "But one thing we've had to deal with is the fire."

City Hall was designed by John McArthur and includes 250 figurative works by sculptor Alexander Calder. The building is patterned in the Second Empire architectural style, a copy of that used in Paris and Moscow.

The construction of City Hall began in 1871 and ended in 1894. Throughout its long existence, many individuals have criticized the edifice, though, and some architectural historians agreed it is similarly fashioned.

"Philadelphia was trying to say to the world, 'we are a world class city. We are the center of the world.'" Rendell said.

WASHINGTON — President Clinton urged a Philippine general who is leading a rebellion against the government to return to his post and end the violence.

The United States and the United Kingdom have stood together to prevent the Israeli-Palestinian conflict from erupting.

The government said the heavily armed men were members of Abu Sayyaf, a Muslim group fighting for a religious state in the southern Philippines.

The group has been linked to a plot to kidnap Pope John Paul II and blow up American airliners over the Pacific.

We are obviously very pleased with the decision, said William Perry, Secretary of Defense. We are aware that the British prime minister.

Workers stop city traffic

PHILADELPHIA - Transit workers got in front of buses and shut down major streets throughout the city on Friday, causing countless commuters to be late for work.

The major agressive day of picketing, striking bus drivers, train operators and mechanics blocked a block of foot traffic from starting their morning routes, leaving commuters stranded on the sidewalks.

The union members then blocked the slow drive to the city on the city's three main highways, turning thousands of cars onto briefcut routes.

"We have, as usual, found much to be grateful for," said Stuart Taylor, a spokesperson with the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority.

"We have said all along that we do not intend to lead a violent strike and not on the vine while we're out there," said Lombardo. "Lombardo and yesterday morning at the bus terminal in Conshohocken, Montgomery County, we have been picketing for a day or so as long as

"SATAN" program may wreak havoc on Internet

A powerful, potentially harmful program that will be able to scan PenseNet for security weaknesses will be unleashed on the Internet today. Could it be... SATAN?

Princeton is where Penn wants to be.

Since that pivotal 1988 season, Penn has become a force in the Ivy League, with 57 consecutive victories and seven titles. After reaching the Final Four in 1988, Princeton's men's basketball team went on to win the Ivy League championship. The Tigers have been able to maintain their success, with a winning percentage of roughly 70 percent. As a result, they have been a constant presence in the Ivy League standings, finishing in the top six every year since 1994.

The contrast between Princeton and the other Ivy League schools is striking. While some teams have struggled with consistency, Princeton has consistently won games and maintained a strong record. This has been due to the team's strong leadership, with Bill Corcoran and Tim Krug leading the way as senior captains. Their teamwork and determination have been key factors in the team's success.

Despite the turnover of graduating seniors, the team has been able to maintain its winning streak. With the graduation of nine starters, including four first-team all-American guards, the team has had to rely on younger players to step up. However, the team has been able to continue its winning streak, with a record of 38-0 against Ivy League competition since 1995.

The team's success has been built on a strong foundation of teamwork and determination. With the graduation of the senior class, the team has had to adapt and adjust to new situations. However, they have been able to maintain their winning streak, with a record of 38-0 against Ivy League competition since 1995.
