In Philadelphia, a city law protects gay and lesbian workers from employment discrimination.

"Their case so far is a complete failure," said Andrew Park, the attorney representing the former employees. "Their concern was not his motive for filing the charge. The reason I am going through all this is that Yates is pursuing this for some other reason."

"The case is that I still have many friends and colleagues and I don't want to be isolated," said Park.

Mummert said the final decision was made after several meetings with Yates on a daily basis, according to Park.

Mummert confirmed Yates' composition claims after he suffered a hernia late last year and was forced to undergo surgery. He said the job 'sort of fell into my hands.'

"The job sort of fell into my hands," Park said. "I got incredible experience and a change of direction as a Pole student who agreed to work with Yates.

Newberg spent the next year as a law student and was able to help him recover from the situation. He ultimately decided to attend Penn State College of Law.

"I got more than I expected," said Park. "I had more than I expected."

Robbed at gunpoint

By Yochi Oreazen

Fingers, Wings and Other Things, a popular campus restaurant located at 36th and Locust streets, was robbed at gunpoint of more than $200 Monday night.

The incident occurred at approximately 7 p.m., according to University Police reports.

Only two customers were in the restaurant at the time of the robbery, according to a cashier who was working at the time.

Mohammed Rony, a delivery person for the restaurant, said three males were present during the robbery.

The cashier, who requested anonymity, explained that the heist appeared to occur in the beginning.

"A guy placed an order and then asked where the bathroom was," she said, explaining that the bathroom is located directly behind the entrance to the restaurant.

"A minute later, a second guy with the same gun and hat that's being used," she said. "He just smiled."

Rony added that because he "wasn't scared." he was able to alert University Police Captain John Richardson, who described the robbery as "quite a premium for the criminals."

Richardson explained that in addition to the restaurant's proximity to Police headquarters, the University Police conduct regular foot patrols.

And the Uni Mart convenience store, popular with police officers "as a pit stop for doughnuts and coffee," is also located on the block.

Richardson explained that in addition to the restaurant's proximity to Police headquarters, the University Police conduct regular foot patrols.

"They were always working on one elevator, which meant that there was no express elevator for the first response," the 2nd floor resident explained.

"I'm limiting that they pay all that money to lie with them," he added.

Engineering and Wharton sophomore James Wang said the only drawback of the new complete elevator interiors and the times they run.

The first time was a long time that all four elevators are working, he notified last night.

Wang said he "is not sure if there are any plans for High Rise East students to come here this summer, werown students, or if he predicted that the work would be completed by the beginning of 1997.

Bodybuilders take to the stage

By Michelle Philip
The Daily Pennsylvanian

At the urging of her track coach, College junior Lorie Roth agreed to participate in the University's first Mr. and Ms. Penn Bodybuilding Contest three years ago. Though she was unsuccessful in her first attempt, Roth achieved her goal last year and will defend it at the first annual contest tonight.

Planned as a way to attract more than 1,000 students, the event is dramatically since its inception, and interest in the event has increased every year. According to Tenisci, six judges will be in charge of bodybuilding competition, which will be held at 7 p.m. in Levine Auditorium. Eleven women and 21 men are expected to compete.

The competition level from the first and second years has increased a great deal in the numbers and quality of people," Green added. "It definitely makes my job tougher.

Female bodybuilders often face a stereotype of being masculine and track team — and quite slight. According to Tenisci, six judges will be in charge of bodybuilding competition, which will be held at 7 p.m. in Levine Auditorium. Eleven women and 21 men are expected to compete.

"When I tell people that I do this, people look at me funny because they assume I should look bigger," Roth said.

Tonight's competition will involve a series of required poses that exhibit the best parts of the body. After the competition, the Natural Physique Committee's reigning Mr. and Ms. Pennsylvania will perform in televised backwater tragicomedy with a clarity sufficient to make the production worth seeing.

Letters to the Editor

More bedtime reading

To the Editor:
I would like to commend and thank the DP for devoting some time to sexuality and especially to female sexuality. When I was a student at Penn, the "Bedroom" (1/25/96) addressed some very important issues. It is not an other point the common knowledge about female sexuality is far from complete. In this context, I would like to clarify the criticism made about the G-spot and female ejaculation. The author refers to some research conducted by Stanford University that ejaculation is normal and natural for women who have experienced it. I agree.
Last semester, I did research on the G-spot and female ejaculation, and wrote my term paper in EDUC157. Conception in man sexuality, as these topics, I found that almost all women report to have experienced some kind of vaginal orgasm, i.e., the G-spot. However, after stimulation this area is not found and is not felt by all women. Some women do experience this stimulation, and more women do experience the potential of experiencing G-spot orgasms and ejaculation.
The women who say they have not experienced it is simple—they have never received the necessary stimulation. I would be intri-ged to know that some women experienced sexual education for the first time when they received the appropriate stimulation because I would like to recommend a survey book written by a graduate of Penn, Tom Leonard.
Sex&Religion: Sex and Religion for College, a book that explains how to experience G-spot orgasms and female ejaculation. Women do experience this stimulation and ejaculation. The

He added that the cellular phones have much more functionality, since they perform a self-diagnosis of operational status, which can be reported back to a control center. This eliminates the need for the department to perform its own surveys.

In addition, the wireless units are portable, so that during events like Spring Fling, they can be moved to accommodate increased traffic in certain areas, Algard said.

Baskin Robbins faces claims

The second mediation with Hanks, to decide if the city ordinance will be applied to the case, has not been scheduled.

Yates complained that Lottman and Mummert have been delaying the meeting.

“I asked for a two-week delay when my store had a fire,” Yates said. “But after that, Lottman and Mummert have been afraid to begin the process.”

But Park denied Yates’ claim. “I wrote many letters to begin the mediation process,” Park said. “I recently wrote long pleas to the executive director of the commission and the city facilitator.”

Yates also complained that his accusers did not have evidence, but Park pointed out that Lottman and Mummert brought two witnesses to the mediation, while Yates had none.

Both sides are anxiously awaiting a response from the commission.

Colombian president linked to campaign funding scandal

BOGOTA, Colombia — President Ernesto Samper is facing a grilling as never before after a newspaper published a story alleging he received millions of dollars from the Cali cartel in return for protective measures in his campaign.

"He knew. The truth is, he knew," Fernando Restrepo, an editor at the weekly Semana magazine, told reporters Monday on the television news program "Viva la Noticia," which is televised in Bogota.

Samper, who has been plagued by the allegations since he was first elected in 1994, denied any personal involvement in the payments, but appeared to admit that Cali druglord Oscar Julio Restrepo was a "close friend" of the state and was "probably the person who handled the business," according to Restrepo's statement.

"I don't think he knew," he added.

The speech was brief by Clinton standards, but it was low key for a man who ran on a campaign of "tough talk.

"I want to see progress toward a balanced budget, " Clinton said, "a balanced budget that protects our national security and哭泣s a deficit reduction that is fair and responsible to all Americans."

He then reiterated a campaign pledge to avert a new federal shutdown or recall. "This is a legitimate concern to a lot of people, and I'm opposed to it," he said.

WASHINGTON — House Republicans backed bill to keep government open

WASHINGTON — House Republicans backed yesterday a bill to keep the federal government open until March 3.

The legislation, which was passed overwhelmingly in both houses, was necessary because the temporary funding measure that had been in place since October was about to expire.

The measure, which would be signed by President Clinton, would allow the government to continue operating while negotiations on a long-term budget agreement take place.

Serbs may have used banned gas against UN

LONDON — A British judge said yesterday he believes Bosnian Serbs used a banned chemical gas against UN observers at the time of its attack on the U.N. base in Sarajevo last month.

The judge said he was forced to make the finding because of the "overwhelming" evidence against the Serbs that was presented at the trial.

The judge, Mr. Justice Maurice Kay, said that he was able to make the finding because of the "overwhelming" evidence against the Serbs that was presented at the trial.

LOUIS ANGELES - O.J. Simpson questioned in private deposition

WASHINGTON - Although the deposition is private, attorneys for the people suing Simpson are expected to call the defendant as a witness on Friday in a Los Angeles court.

The videotaped deposition is for the wrongful-death lawsuit filed against Simpson by Goldman's family and Ms. Simpson's estate. The civil trial is expected to last six weeks.

Simpson himself has emphasized that such comments have come only from the plaintiffs' side and shouldn't be taken as fact.

Simpson's legal team has said he was going "exceptionally well." Goldman said the deposition would not be until Friday afternoon.

Although the deposition is private, attorneys can release the transcript later if they choose.

Owls’ defense keys big second-half run

It was a good game tonight, Joe Bryant. The younger Bryant, who often sits in the director, between La Salle, a few other top oil apps among the Quakers. His NBA draft was looking at last night, but Joe Bryant on the La Salle bench next year more than Chaney, who is always pulling for local talent to stay at home.

"I am a real hoot," Chaney said. "It was a great feeling."

It was clear from the start that the Owls would be right in there. Kathleen Gunn said it was a real hoot. Great feeling.

"I don't have to worry about my shot or make it," Chaney said. "I can't make the problem," King said.

"There are some variables. If you change one, you can throw off that one," Chaney said. "And if I was in total, this year's team has a much better team.

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Bill Walsh, who led San Francisco to four Super Bowl titles in the 1980s as head coach, expressed Tuesday as a consultant that he was comfortable with the approach of new coach George Seifert.

"The fact is, it's probably one of the most difficult things I've had to do," Walsh said. "It's been a real challenge for me to have to deal with the situation as a coach leaving the team. I think it's going to be difficult for me to have to go through the season as a consultant, but I feel comfortable with the situation."

Walsh, 64, was given the title administrative assistant to Seifert on Monday. He spent the previous three years in a second tour as Stanford head coach before resigning last year. Walsh led the Cardinal to a 30-9 record and two Pac-10 championships.

"I'm sure there will be some sticky spots," Walsh said of the transition. "I think it's going to be a difficult thing for me to go through it as a consultant. I think it's going to be difficult for me to go through it as a consultant."

Walsh, who was a two-time Super Bowl champion in the 1960s, said he was comfortable with the position as a consultant, but was comfortable with the situation as a coach.

"It's not an easy thing to do," Walsh said. "It's not an easy thing to do. It's been a real challenge for me to have to deal with the situation as a consultant. I think it's going to be difficult for me to have to go through the season as a consultant, but I feel comfortable with the situation."
A compromise that would add two new assistants to the program would allow the women's crew coach to retain her position

By Hanan Fishman
The Daily Pennsylvanian

In sports, nothing breeds discontent as much as the addition or subtraction of a potential assistant coach. That was the case this past week, when the Pennsylvania women's crew team opened a possibly decisive, infrequent dialogue with the assistant-coach-to-be-augmented personnel of the Ivy League. Assistant-Covetor-and-Expert-Fishman, whose name has been circulating around the rowing environment for the past few weeks, recently spoke to the Daily Pennsylvanian about his desire to take a position on the men's crew team, which he hopes to do in the next few weeks. "I would like to see the team improve and compete at a higher level," he said. "I have been working with the team for a few years now, and I feel that we can take it to the next level."

The possibility of a new assistant coach has raised hopes among the team's athletes. "It's good to have someone with experience and knowledge," said captain Kate Moxley. "They have been through the Ivy League, and they know what it takes to win."

But there are also concerns. "I'm not sure if we need another coach," said freshman Alison Zegar. "The team has been doing well without one, and I think we can continue to improve on our own." The team has not made any official decision about the possibility of a new assistant coach, and they will continue to discuss the matter in the coming weeks.

Second-half run too much for La Salle

By Jed Walentas
The Daily Pennsylvanian

The Temple Owls men's basketball team has found that free throws have become a focal point of their game. With the team trailing by two points against La Salle, Fran Dunphy has begun to impose penalties for free throw violations. "It's a focal point," he said. "We have to make sure we take the shots we need to make and not let them get easy ones."

The Owls have been trying to improve their free throw shooting, and they have been successful so far. In their last game against La Salle, the Owls made 15 out of 18 free throws, which is an improvement from their previous game where they made only 10 out of 14.

But there is still work to be done. "We need to work on our free throw shooting," said senior Tim Krug. "We have been making them from the line, but we need to work on our shot selection as well."

The Owls are currently in the top five of the Ivy League in free throw shooting, and they hope to continue that success in future games.

Charity stripe has not been generous to the Quakers

Penn's free-throw percentage has not cost the men's basketball team an Ivy League game — yet

By Ryan Siegel
The Daily Pennsylvanian

The Quakers are shooting just 41.2 percent from the line in Ivy League play, which is significantly lower than the league average of 51.5 percent. "It's not been a good year for us at the free throw line," said coach Tim Krug. "We have been in a lot of close games where we have had opportunities to win, but we couldn't make the shots."

The Quakers have made only 35 out of 77 free throws in Ivy League play, which is a success rate of 45.1 percent. "We need to work on our free throw shooting," said senior Tim Krug. "We have been in close games, and we need to make those shots to win.

The Quakers are currently in last place in the Ivy League in free throw shooting, and they hope to improve in future games.
