Artist Andres Serrano’s photograph “Piss Christ” — depicting the crucified Christ encased in a clear tube of urine — and similar piece of art, English Department Chairperson Wendy Steiner says she believes it is always in the eye of the beholder.

The controversy spawned by Serrano’s exhibit, in addition to the work of artists like photographer Robert Mapplethorpe and author Salman Rushdie, is the subject of Steiner’s recent book, “The Scandal of Plon-

Ferguson

By Kate Khatib

Veronica Ferguson knows the world of organization and inequity well. Perhaps it is for this reason that she is so dedicated to working for a more harmonious society.

Ferguson, current president of the international Society of Nurses in Canzer Care, was recently given the opportunity to travel to South Africa as a visiting associate professor of the University of the Northeast. When she is not running the world, Ferguson serves as a senior fellow to cultural dispeets at the School of Nursing. Ferguson took on this position in 1993, when then University President Dr. Vane Glotz left the Nurse in order to devote time and energy to dealing with issues of cultural diversity.

Nursing in South Africa

Ferguson was chosen to be a part of the international speaker bureau because of her dedication to the issue of cultural diversity and the need for cultural awareness. She said she had been invited to present in South Africa three years ago but that she intentionally delayed the trip until last year.

She noted that she was invited to present in South Africa because of the lack of cultural awareness and the need for cultural diversity in the nursing community. Ferguson added that she recognized the need for cultural diversity in the nursing community and the importance of cultural awareness in the nursing profession. She said that she had been invited to present in South Africa because of the lack of cultural awareness and the need for cultural diversity in the nursing community.

STEINER

"It's much easier to burn a book than to change social behavior," she said. "No one should be able to make that decision for you." She believes that when a government supports art, it should do so as much financially as in the past. Yet, despite the fact that it is not supported in the United States as much as in other countries, "I think it's to America's credit to have faith in the future," Steiner said. "It's a gesture of great civility for government support culture," Steiner said. "It's a vote of confidence that it will continue to flourish and that we can be optimistic about art's future in society." She is confident that it will continue to flourish and that the arts will be able to express the values and ideas of society.

New professors adjust to Penn

By Malea Wong

The University boasts approximately 48 new faculty members across the four undergraduate schools for the 1995-96 academic year. The new professors had difficulty navigating between their various areas of expertise and working with other departments.

"I've been on the job for about three months and it's been hard," said Political Science John Howard. "I think there's a lack of communication and cooperation between the different departments.

Most new professors said they struggle to balance the workload of administration and research.

"It's been very difficult to balance the responsibilities of teaching, research, and service," said Sociology of Science Steven Feierman. "I think many new faculty are still adjusting to the pace of academic life.

Despite the challenges, many new professors are enjoying their new positions. A few professors said they have been pleasantly surprised by the warm reception of administrators and faculty.

"I was very impressed by the faculty," said Sylvia Santa-Kanna, a professor of Middle Eastern Studies. "They have been very welcoming and helpful.

Some professors have recently relocated to the University, while others have moved from other institutions. For example, History Professor Sadashige explained, "I came here from the University of Chicago and am already engaged in several projects.

In total, 48 new professors have joined the faculty this year, fulfilling the University's plan to hire 50 new tenured faculty members over the next five years.

The University is committed to recruiting high-quality faculty to support its growth in research and teaching.

Gone to speak at U. for ENIAC celebration

By Jaclyn LaPace

Philadelphia University graduate Kelly Mitchell said she was not surprised to see the University's history professor, Harold Prince, give a lecture at the University for the celebration of the ENIAC.

"I was very impressed by him," said Mitchell, who was a student of Prince's at the University.

Mitchell, who received her bachelor's degree in history from Philadelphia University, said she was excited to see Prince give a lecture at the University.

"I was very impressed by his lecture," said Mitchell. "I think he did a great job.

During the lecture, Prince covered the history of the ENIAC and its impact on the development of modern computers.

Mitchell said she was interested in learning more about the history of the ENIAC.

"I really enjoyed learning about the history of the ENIAC," said Mitchell.

Prince, who is currently a professor at the University of Pennsylvania, said he was pleased to be able to speak at the University.

"I was pleased to be able to speak at the University," said Prince. "I think it's a great opportunity for me.

The original House proposal would have also required students to pay a personal fee on the total volume of their student loans. This fee was then reduced by the limit to 4 percent.

The original plan would have cut $5 billion from the national budget, which would have been used to fund the ENIAC program. The plan was "killed pretty early," according to Adractas.

Crystal's claims demands

_Tribune-Review_
_Thomas E. Crow_

I thought that the recent column by Dave Cristal on "City construction," (DP, 2/16) was needlessly offensive and logically incorrect.

Cristal's argument on his attack against "social construction" of race and Professor Michael Carter's column that begins with "Science irrevocably proves that there are three broad categories of human race...". According to Cristal, the three categories are: Negroes, Caucasoids, and Monoids. He also seems to suggest that there is a connection between those broad categories and intelligence.

The writer should not be signaling his views to the local community. Cristal's statements are unfounded. Those who are concerned about the scientific shaping of society should not be silent. It is an important issue that should be brought to light.

Gymnastics to take on Yale
By Sonal Mehta

The key to making mistakes is to learn from them. And that is what the young Penn gymnastics team hopes to do when it travels to New Haven, Conn., to meet Yale Saturday.

After a dismal performance at the George Washington Invitational last weekend, the team heads west with a clear objective in mind — to improve.

"Being one of the weaker events for Fenn, the bars is something we're going to have to contend with," said first-year coach Tom Kovic.

During their first weekend, the Quakers know that to hit, they must minimize their errors.

But they've got a lot of work to do, and they have already begun to realize that.

"We know that we're not there yet," said senior LaShana Taylor. "We're working on getting to the point where we can hit consistency and compete against the top teams that are already there.

To improve, the Quakers have already begun to implement improvements in their routines. For example, they've added more jumps to their routine, and they've changed their dismount so that it's more consistent. They've also added more variety to their routine, with more different moves.

"We've got a lot of work to do," said Taylor. "But we're confident that we can improve.

The forecast calls for snow, and the team has already come to terms with the potential for inclement weather Saturday.

"We've got a lot of work to do," said Taylor. "But we're confident that we can improve.

Competition from national power Notre Dame, the Quakers will be led by junior captain Craig Rappaport, who is ranked in the top five in the nation.

"I don't think that we're underdogs," said Rappaport. "We're confident that we can compete against the top teams that are already there.

The toughest part of this weekend for the Quakers is that they have to travel to New Haven, which is a two-hour drive for the team. But the team is already confident that they can handle the travel and the competition.

"We're going to have to work hard to prepare for this weekend," said Kovic. "But we're confident that we can compete against the top teams that are already there."

Penn returns to Ivy play this weekend

It has been an eventful period for the Penn basketball team this season. Point guard James Tyree will miss the rest of the season after he tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee in a Jan. 16 loss to Hofstra. Tyree will not return to competition this season, and it will be up to the remaining players to fill the void.

Penn returns to Ivy play this weekend, and the Quakers have the opportunity to make a statement in the Centennial Conference. The Quakers are 7-2 in overall conference play and have won three in a row, including a victory over the Lions last weekend. The Quakers are currently tied with the Nittany Lions for second place in the conference, just one game behind the leaders, the Leopards.

"We're excited to get back to work," said head coach Brad Smart. "We have a lot of work to do, but we're confident in our players and their ability to perform.

The Quakers will face off against the Nittany Lions on Saturday at 2:00 p.m. at the Palestra. The game is expected to be a tight one, as the Nittany Lions have been one of the most consistent teams in the conference this season. However, the Quakers have shown that they can compete with the best of them, and Smart is confident in his team's ability to pull out a victory.

"We've been playing well as a team, and we're confident in our ability to put points on the board," said Smart. "We're excited to face the Nittany Lions and see what we can do on the court.

So, the Quakers will be looking to make a statement this weekend, and they have the opportunity to do just that. With a win over the Nittany Lions, the Quakers could move into second place in the conference, and with a few more wins, they could even challenge for the conference title. Whatever happens, the Quakers are sure to put on a show that will be worth watching.
