Media spotlight shines on 50th anniversary, Gore's speech on 'The Technology Challenge'

By Andrea Antes

Though the proposed judicial charter draft contained some criticism aimed at prior drafters and included changes for the enacting group, the new charter was released last week. It is the first in a series of drafts written in collaboration with the student charter committee.

The draft committee in charge of creating a student charter met twice this semester, and it was finally published and presented to the student body in the form of a set of articles.

The students approved the draft charter, and the draft was then sent to the faculty, who voted to accept the draft as is.

The group met again last week, and the charter was sent back to the student body for approval. The charter was also presented at a town hall meeting held by the faculty.

The charter will now be sent to the Board of Trustees, and the charter committee will meet to discuss the charter before the next student body meeting.

Get the charter and read it for yourself! You can find the charter on the University of Pennsylvania's website.
New judicial charter draft faces criticism

The Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity had been an organized entity at the University for nearly 100 years.

The fraternity had a charter from 1912, and its members had been administering their own internal businesses. However, in the late 1960s and early 1970s, the University administration decided to reorganize all student fraternity and sorority organizations.

The new proposal would allow the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity to continue to operate as an independent entity, but it would also allow the university to supervise their affairs and ensure that they were compliant with University policies.

The proposal was met with mixed reactions from the fraternity's members. Some were happy with the new charter, while others were concerned about the increased supervision.

Love in the '90s challenges social tradition

When Engineering and Wharton senior Monica Petra came to the University from Romania, she underestimated the degree she would face in loneliness. As a young, white female who attended an international boarding school in Italy, Petra had found interracial relationships the norm.

"We respected each other as individuals because the diversity didn't allow for separate groups," said Petra. "We lived in the same school, but sometimes instead of blending together, two people's skin colors are distinctly separate in what we know," he said.

Interracial dating has become a popular subject in recent years, with many students finding it relevant to their daily lives, often experiencing for themselves the difficulties in relationships to their own at the University. However, many students have also been the victims of prejudice on many occasions.

"I was surprised when they objected because they have always been open about relating to different kinds of people," Petra said. "I think that he's afraid of what other people will think."

St. Hill recounted a recent experience where he had glanced at an interracial couple while on Locust Walk, wanting to tell them that it was great to see similar relationships to his own at the University. However, he feared they interpreted his gaze to be a prejudiced one.

"It's really unfortunate that people tend to only stick with what they know," he said.

"I think that he's afraid of what other people will think."

"I think he's afraid of what other people will think," Petra explained. "I think that he's afraid of what other people will think."

'Juggling mathematician' speaks
By Michael Welter
The Daily Pennsylvanian

ENIAC's 50th anniversary is not the only event this week at the University of Pennsylvania. This week also marks the Moore Building's 50th anniversary and the arrival of a juggler and mathematician named Ben Graham. Graham, the self-proclaimed juggling mathematician, spent yesterday afternoon explaining to about 30 students and professors how he has applied principals of mathematics to juggling and vice versa.

According to College and Engineering Associate Juggler, who organized the event, Graham is an internationally known juggler and mathematics honors society Pi Mu Epsilon, the American Mathematical Society.

The event attempted to show how juggling can illustrate complex mathematical problems involving algebraic numbers and sequences. Graham is an internation ally known juggler and mathematics graduate student Parse Selinger described the event as "a wonderful opportunity for students to gain a powerful sense of how mathematics and juggling are involved in mathematics and computer-related fields. "Juggling is a vehicle that explains a problem, " Graham said. "When you understand the math, you can apply it back to the juggling to create new tricks."

ENIAC ushered in the information age 50 years ago, and it’s only fitting that Vice President Gore is here to mark this milestone.

Dear Vice President Gore:

We’re glad you’re here today to celebrate the 50th anniversary of ENIAC, the world’s first general-purpose electronic computer.

We know the “information superhighway” has been one of your top priorities over the past three years as a member of the Clinton administration. It’s flattering that you accepted our invitation to chair this commemoration of the birth of modern computing.

We just wish more of us could see you speak.

Yes, even though you’ll be giving the keynote address in the largest auditorium on campus, administrators and faculty will be working to ensure there are 30,000 students, faculty and staff here at the University.

We appreciate the momentousness of this occasion. After all, you wouldn’t be reading this newspaper today—or seeing the same story in the Associated Press.

Nathan Smith says the key to surviving Valentine’s Day single is realizing that it’s all a farce.

o the big day is here, and you don’t have a sweetheart with whom to cuddle and how about you and ’s Blitze. What are you going to do with your singles night?

Don’t fret, Smith suggests, and opt for more appropriate for Hallo"en. Give up on romantic dinner and cozy night under the stars and get a grip. If you want to try something new, find out what your student’s guide report on the city.

Guest Column

Perhaps you should grab the nearest classroom phone and give the single Dolores D. a ring and tell her you want to get together for dinner and a movie.

Dolores D. (a prettier name for your right edge) or worse, the person might say, “Oh, sure,” and then walk off. Then you have a valentine, and you’re at quite a loss what exactly to do next. It’s a terrible situation.

So you should take every opportunity to romance every shop window, bookstore or wherever. You can’t lose, and if you don’t make the rounds, you can’t be on the outside of this world’s celebration.

The whole world, that is.

And lastly, Smith notes, don’t use this time to contemplating this column in honor of all the fateful, unfaithful romantics out there who were there at the coming of February 14. So anyone facing this problem could you ever say you had the power to make then residences in the middle of the night and damaged and improved orderliness when not leaving. Students to protest against telecom law

By Dina Bass

The students' protest of the Communications Decency Act.—An action against the telecom law will continue tomorrow with a demonstration in front of Irvine Auditorium during President James DeGioia's speech commemorating the 50th Anniversary of ENIAC.

A group of students calling themselves the Coalition Against the Communications Decency Act plan to stage the protest beginning at 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The telecom bill, which was signed into law last week, contains provisions against the transmission of indecent material over a computer network if that material may be seen by a minor.

U. security tight for Gore’s visit
By Yochi Dreazen
The University community will wit- nesses one of the largest security eff- orts ever at the University. Vice President Al Gore’s visit on cam- pus comes in the wake of a Simon’s Distinguished Lecture by former Vice President Al Gore. Gore has been on the University’s list of speakers for some time, but after the election, the University decided to move forward with the visit. Gore’s visit was announced last week, and the University has been working on security preparations for weeks. The University has enlisted the help of the Secret Service and other law enforcement agencies to ensure the safety of Gore and the community. The University has also worked with the City of Philadelphia and other local authorities to ensure the safety of the event. The University is confident that the security measures in place will ensure a safe and successful event. The University community is excited to have Gore visit, and they look forward to hearing his speech and engaging with him during his visit. The University community is grateful to the University for their efforts in ensuring the safety of the event.

Vikes. We lost to Dartmouth. Here’s My Roundup.

The Bandwagon Jumppers of the Week

In sports, the Vikes are soaring, thus the fair-weather fan who jumps on the bandwagon when the heat is on. At Dartmouth, however, there is no story of any note — but there still was an exciting event.

In the dank, dismal cage called the Liede High School Gym (yes, Amen) — a place that sounds more like a tin shed than a gymnasium, Danke dock — ten, huge New Hampshire bears, having just eaten their dinner, decided to sit down right in front of the foundation.

Needless to say, we at Roundup were making enough noise and made enough Big ORENS BROTHERS

Eck reunited with LaRussa in St. Louis
ST. LOUIS — Dennis Eckersley said goodbye to the Oakland Athletics on Tuesday, following his 21-year manager and pitching coach career with the Athletics.
Completing a long-discussed deal, Eckersley was introduced as manager and pitching coach to the St. Louis Cardinals for minor league re-er manager and pitching coach to the St. Louis minating closers. With Oakland, Eckersley won four two game being tried and talked at the start of the third quarter. The home team had not won at Boston College (13-4, 8-5 since 1986).
Eckersley told the prepared, and said, "It's almost as good as going work at the San Francisco Giants." The deal was the worst for about three months. One of the striking points in ongoing negratulations was that the Cardinals reunited Oakland for part of Eckersley's $12.5 million salary.
Now he is a member of a contender again. Since joining the D-Backs, the second worst in the National League, the Cardinals have changed ownership and added pitchers Andy Benes and Jeffavorite.

Fan favorite Cedric Laster is finally seeing quality time

By Srikanth Reddy

Cedric Laster's prospects for playing time were dim in his first season. He could only watch as his good friend Laker Brown piled up points and rebounds off the bench.

"It was tough to see," Laster said. "But after two years, I'm finally getting my chance at playing in the conference tournament and getting some quality time on the floor.

Laster has averaged 8.2 points and 4.3 rebounds in his last five games. He scored a team-high 21 points in Eastern Connecticut State University's win over Dartmouth on Thursday night.

"I'm just trying to take advantage of my opportunities," Laster said. "I'm really looking forward to the conference tournament and getting some quality time on the floor.

Laster has been a key player for the Quakers in the last few games. He scored 19 points in Saturday's win over Brown, and he had a team-high 11 rebounds in Thursday's win over Dartmouth.

"I'm really happy with the way I've been playing," Laster said. "I'm just trying to stay focused and continue to improve my game.

The Quakers have home games against Brown on January 12 and Columbia on January 19. Laster is looking forward to those games and hopes to continue his strong play.

"I'm really looking forward to the home games," Laster said. "I really want to help the team win those games and get us back into the conference tournament.

Laster has been a valuable member of the Quakers' bench since his arrival, and he's ready to take his game to the next level in the conference tournament.

"I'm really excited to see what I can do in the conference tournament," Laster said. "I really want to help the team win and get us back into the tournament.

Jimenez and King take the lead

Captains Angie Jimenez and Kelley King are a perfect combo

By Mike Quigley

Jimenez and King were both selected as co-captains of the Penn women's track and field team for the 2014-15 season.

"Angie and Kelley are incredibly driven," said head coach Steve舱 cock. "They are both outstanding student-athletes and leaders on and off the track.

Jimenez and King have been a part of the track and field team since their freshman year in 2011.

"Just having them on the team has been great," said Quigley. "They are both very hard-working and dedicated to their studies and athletics.

Jimenez is a native ofummiesville, Maryland, and King is from Lebanon, Pennsylvania.

"They are both great role models for the younger athletes," said Quigley. "They are both very hard-working and dedicated to their studies and athletics.
