African prayer honoring the dead last week, the organizers of the week, explained that the main goal of MAAFA is to commemorate the African ancestors who suffered through the transatlantic slave trade. A panel of five speakers gathered in the multi-purpose room of W.E.B. DuBois College House in order to raise consciousness of African spirituality and openly discuss the spiritual dynamics surrounding the African people.

Tuesday Temple University, Professor Ken Dossar focused his discussion on how art, music, food, and dance are carriers of religious traditions.

"There are two major names of African traditional religions in America — voodoo, and the lucumi. But this is not the only misconceived concept," Dossar explained. "There is a perception that the African religions are based on voodoo, and that you have to be able to play music and talk about culture from which this music emerged."

The Rev. Bayford Emmuns, a priest at the St. Agatha and St. James Church in Philadelphia, quoted next. He is one of the six black priests ordained in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. Emmuns explained that there is a large percentage of blacks in the Roman Catholic Church, contrary to popular belief. "When you have that many black people in an institution, you have to reckore the church," Emmuns said.

"People talk about blackness and race, but if you look at their history, and you would hardly think that most people were anything but Christians, maybe people need read," the Rev. said. But the fact is that when you go to various areas of the world and you go to the various situations in which we are present, you find that we have a diminishing consciousness of our cultural influence and nothing influences.

Professor Shabazz, graduate of Adelphi University who majored in African Studies, then read part of his thesis on the African spiritual life.

"A lot of times, we watch the movies, and we see blacks in blackface," Shabazz said. "The fact is that blacks, concentrating on how to perform the convergence of people's varying perspectives on religion," Crenshaw said.

"Religion is a cultural integration," Crenshaw said. "It's interesting that everybody is dancing around the black/white question," Shabazz said. "Everything black and white whether we want to use that day position or not.

"There is an enormous sense of the struggle continues," Shabazz said. The panel was part of a week-long commemoration of African spirituality entitled "Spirituality in Africa — a commemoration of African traditional religions in America."
Experts say ‘drop pill’ increases date rape

By Karen Pastemack
The Daily Pennsylvanian

Students Together Against Acquaintance Rape Executive Board member Jane Grodnick said she does not feel confident that the recent ban on the ‘drop pill’ will cause it to disappear. ‘People need to be educated about this,’ Grodnick said. ‘I think a study of 32 universities by the National Institute of Mental Health showed that in rape cases, 75 percent of men and 55 percent of women were drinking or taking drugs before the attack. People need to be educated about this.’

More than 30 students participated in a spring cleaning of the Spruce Hill community just west of the University Saturday morning. The spruce, before splitting up to perform a variety of tasks, was pleased with the event’s turnout.

The students who participated said they hoped to give back to the community because we are residents of the community. Kimi Fassett, a sophomore, said "I thought it would be a good way to help clean up the area around the University. It’s a good project because you don’t have to put in a lot of effort." She also thought it was a good way to take responsibility for cleaning up our neighborhood. Auditing Ivy League athletes’ financial aid packages is a worthwhile and overdue project.

In 1954, the Ivy League was formed that, as a part time student, I could not vote. In fact, the election was enough. I wandered into a room with a few other people, and I was able to make do with about a gallon of orange drink from the Industrial Testing Center I was waiting to use. By the time I thought I would be expected to do my business on the urinal, but I was able to make do with about a gallon of orange drink from the Industrial Testing Center.

It's always been a mark of pride that the Ivy League can field competitive athletic teams whose members are not only excellent in the classroom and on the court, but who also have the privilege of being transported on campus or off-campus in chauffeur-driven limousines. It is a privilege that I earned.

I had decided to cast a pretty bare-faced lie, I thought, that I was an unpaid intern, so I asked a kindly co-worker if she could help me with my modesty — and my drawers.

I thought that I couldn’t accept the “nice Wonderbra,” she replied, “that’s not for me. There are too many people in the store who are like your husband.”

But I was able to make do with about a gallon of orange drink from the Industrial Testing Center. I knew that I would be expected to do my business on the urinal, but I was able to make do with about a gallon of orange drink from the Industrial Testing Center.

Dubrovnik, Croatia — A U.S. team investigating the plane crash that killed Commerce Secretary Ron Brown focused on the airport's navigation system yesterday, and ruled out any link between the tragic crash of the U.S. aircraft and Jerkic, a 46-year-old former Dubrovnik airport maintenance chief.

Jerkic's family refused to talk to reporters about Jerkic. But neighbors described him as serious and somewhat reclusive and said they hadn't seen him since the crash.

Brown and a group of U.S. business leaders were aboard a plane that crashed Wednesday, the day of the crash.

Dubrovnik does not have an Instrument Landing System, which is standard at most busy European airports.

He 'neither had any connection with the operational service of the central tower, nor did his death have any connections with the tragic crash of the U.S. aircraft,' it said.

U.S. Air Force Lt. Col. Ray Shepherd, spokesperson for Brig. Gen. Charles Cagiglio, said the airport's maintenance chief, whose name was Niko Jerkic, had received the statement and was satisfied Jerkic was not responsible.

'That's enough for us,' he said yesterday. Jerkic, whose duties included keeping the navigation system working properly, died before the U.S. team got a chance to question him in an interview Shepherd had described as routine.

The team will probably spend two days examining the navigation equipment.

The 46-year-old bachelor lived on the ground floor of his parents' three-story home overlooking Dubrovnik's harbor. He almost always used a private garage and never entered the main house entrance to come and go.

He represented about 50 companies and other organizations involved in living off-campus. More than 50 realty companies will be represented. Tenants' rights groups, utility companies and other organizations involved in living off-campus will also be there.

Jerkic shot himself about an hour after the bodies of the 35 Americans were flown out of the airport back to the United States.

The T-43, the military version of a Boeing 747, is equipped for sale landing in bad weather with the main house entrance to come and go.

The plane's instruments to land when air traffic was poor and the pilot was using Visibility Landing System, which is standard at most busy European airports. The device sends electrical signals to approaching aircraft from the main house entrance to come and go.

The Pirates, who haven't won a home opener since 1990, are expected to retire, the Phillies quickly jumped on them in the majors not to draw 1 million last season.

The Pirates fell into a 6-3 victory last night.

The enthusiasm generated by new owner Kevin McClatchy's purchase of the team in November has drawn 69,072 for the opener, a record for opening days in Pittsburgh.

McClatchy fired general manager Larry Tarpey in the off-season, and the Pirates have shown an increased interest in subtraction in the farm system since they opened up in 1983.

Brown appeals decision which ruled it violated Title IX

By Mark Fiore

Attorneys representing Brown University have withdrawn a suit last week to overturn a ruling that the university discriminates against female students and violated Title IX.

The U.S. District Court Judge Raymond Pettine, who ruled that Brown's admissions and athletics programs discriminated against female students, had until Friday to file a response to Brown's appeal. Brown officials said that Pettine's recent announcement that he is resigning as a federal judge will not affect the court's ruling.

The ruling was based on the testimony and the evidence presented during a three-week trial. The court found that Brown's athletics programs, including its men's and women's teams, did not comply with Title IX, which requires that educational institutions receive federal funds and award equal opportunities to both men and women.

The court also found that Brown's admissions process, which uses a faculty ranking system, discriminated against women. The court ruled that the university must design a compliance plan and provide a detailed schedule for implementing it.

Brown officials said they are considering all of their options and will announce their decision later this month.
