The magic of art...
Holly Loth says people have to monitor those in power and use their own judgement to make personal decisions about things like drug use.

Kris, your aunt Holly has heard some things about you, especially from friends and some passed along in magazines and newspapers. I cannot guarantee they are all 100% factual, but it is apparent that they might be true. What I am saying is that matters like these might be more crucial than they seemed, but they were never as bad as they were said to be.

In those years, I was very much a new mother. I had just graduated from college and was working full-time as a secretary. My husband, Bob, was a college dropout and was working as a janitor at the local university. We were living in a small apartment with our son, and we were trying to make ends meet.

I have always been a strong believer in the importance of education and have been active in my community's schools and libraries. I have watched with concern as the funding for these institutions has decreased, and I have seen the impact it has had on the quality of education available to our children.

This past year, we have witnessed an increasing number of incidents of violence in our community. These events have caused great concern and have highlighted the need for strong leadership and the importance of working together as a community.

I know that there are many different views on this issue, but I believe it is important for us to have open and honest discussions about these matters. By doing so, we can work towards finding solutions that are in the best interests of our community and our future.

Thank you for listening, and I hope that we can continue to work together to make our community a safer and more vibrant place to live.

Sincerely,

Holly Loth

U. attorney transfers to Drexel U.

By Kate Khatib
The Summer Pennsylvanian

Frank Roth, associate General Council of the University of Pennsylvania, announced his resignation today. Roth will be assuming the position of General Council of Drexel University. He is one of the General Council of his planned retirement in May.

Roth said he is a great opportunity for him and his family. He said he was very proud of the work he has done for the University.

Roth said he was looking to researchers, but he was not sure if he would be able to do it.

He said he was looking forward to the great institution.

The only reason I am here to do the work I do is because of the facilities. I don't see how that helps the University.

Roth said he was looking forward to the great institution.
Emeritus professor dies at 80, founded Wharton M.B.A. plan

COLD COMFORT FARM - Gramercy

By James Ingraham

Imagine you have a great job as an executive at Pepsi. Despite playing second fiddle to Coca-Cola, the company has a great market share, a world-renowned set of products, deals with every major distribution channel, and there are no serious threats to your position. And then everything changes, people start drinking Sprite, a lot of Sprite.

The worst part of the red-rleight crisis is that for several years Pepsi has been trying to regroup, beginning to move into Coca-Cola's top slot. Pepsi's own advertising at the time was a multi- year exercise in self-deprecation, accusing Coca-Cola of being "Coke-a Cola." Pepsi's Superbowl ad this year highlighted the fact that when Sprite was introduced to the public, it was given a week to pick up the pieces.

Coca-Cola decided to take the battle to Sprite's home turf, creating a raw and unfiltered ad that felt like a parody. Sprite's ads had been one big jingle, one big joke, one big attempt to sell soda. Coca-Cola decided to make a point; the battle was with Sprite.

Pepsi's biggest mistake was that they ignored all of this. Not only did they make a mistake, they made a big one.

Pepsi has been successfully developing the new breed of cola and coffee. The limited time idea makes as much sense as Sprite's wierd little mix.

The story starts out with our problematic hero, the famous Robert Penn. (Penn's son, the novelist, is what makes this possible.) Penn's book was a major commercial success, and it has been made into a movie. Penn is an actor, but he's never really made it to the big time. He's had a few minor roles, but nothing that has really done well, however, and he's been stuck in the position of second among the rest of the publishing world.

One of the characters introduced in the story is a woman named Mrs. Smiley. She's a very smart, very capable woman who has been working as a writer for several years, and has finally gotten her big break. She's a very intelligent and sophisticated woman, and she's very attractive.

The story continues with Mrs. Smiley and her husband, who is an actor. They live in a small apartment in New York City, and they are trying to make it in the tough world of show business. Mrs. Smiley is a very good writer, and she has a lot of talent, but she's having a hard time getting started. Her husband, on the other hand, is very successful, and he's been able to land a few good roles.

The story will follow the lives of these two people, and it will explore the challenges they face as they try to make it in the competitive world of show business. It will be a very funny and entertaining story, and it will feature some very talented actors. It will be a great addition to the world of contemporary literature.
One song we must mention is the awesome "I'm Shit!". This song sounds like a parody of the typical punk rock tune. The singer sings with such a passion and determination, it's hard not to be moved by his vocal delivery. The music is fast-paced and aggressive, making it perfect for a punk rock fan. Overall, the album "I.R.S. Records" has a lot to offer, whether you're a punk rock aficionado or just looking for some good, old-fashioned fun.

-Bruce Smith

In conclusion, "I.R.S. Records" is a great album that is sure to please fans of punk rock. With its fast-paced, catchy tunes and thought-provoking lyrics, it's a must-listen for anyone who loves punk music. So, grab your favorite headphones and get ready to rock out to some great punk music!

least of which was location. Although originally priced for its proximity to commuter lines, the old neighborhood was not conducive to the ever-swelling suburbs who wanted to drive to the city and park their cars. Places were hard to come by and the crime rate in the area, already alarmingly high, was constantly on the rise.

In 1923, when the park's owners bickering with city officials became intolerable, former Phillies owner Grover H. Whalen and Charles P. Devereux, who were still flocked to the Vet to see the last remnants of the 1911 pennant winners. This group of players included the likes of Walter Johnson, who had made up this with incrediblegbes

Phillies are no crowd in the sun

At the outbreak of the 19th century, Philadelphia was already considered one of the greatest sporting centers of the nation. The city's sports teams were already long-standing, and the Philadelphia Athletics, founded in 1883, had a loyal following. The Philadelphia Phillies, founded in 1883, also had a strong fan base, but they struggled to draw crowds. However, during the late 19th century, the Philadelphia Phillies began to draw larger crowds, and by the early 1900s, the team was drawing more than 20,000 fans to each game.

The Philadelphia Athletics opened "modern" Shibe Park on April 12, 1909, with an 8-1 victory over the Tigers. This new stadium was a major improvement over the old Athletics Park, which had been built in 1871. Shibe Park was larger, with a seating capacity of about 33,000, and it was located in a more central part of the city. The Athletics and the Phillies were two of the most popular teams in Philadelphia, and both teams were considered to be among the best in the league. However, it was the Phillies who were the more successful team, winning the National League pennant in 1915 and 1918.

But the Phillies' success did not translate into higher attendance. In fact, the team's attendance was quite low, and the team struggled to make ends meet. However, the team was able to attract some of the best players in the league, including Hall of Famers Connie Mack, Jack Barry, and Urban Shocker.

During the early 20th century, the Philadelphia Athletics and the Philadelphia Phillies were two of the most popular teams in the city. Shibe Park was the teams' home base, and it was a major attraction for fans. The team's success, combined with the city's rich history of sports, helped to draw more and more fans to the games. By the late 1920s, the Phillies were drawing more than 20,000 fans to each game, and the team was considered to be one of the most popular in the league.

The Philadelphia Phillies opened "modern" Shibe Park on April 12, 1909, with an 8-1 victory over the Tigers. This new stadium was a major improvement over the old Athletics Park, which had been built in 1871. Shibe Park was larger, with a seating capacity of about 33,000, and it was located in a more central part of the city. The Athletics and the Phillies were two of the most popular teams in Philadelphia, and both teams were considered to be among the best in the league. However, it was the Phillies who were the more successful team, winning the National League pennant in 1915 and 1918.

But the Phillies' success did not translate into higher attendance. In fact, the team's attendance was quite low, and the team struggled to make ends meet. However, the team was able to attract some of the best players in the league, including Hall of Famers Connie Mack, Jack Barry, and Urban Shocker.
