The technology is meant to improve security and update identification technology. By adding a higher degree of security to many access control systems on campus, the proposal is an effective and convenient way to maintain safety and security on campus. According to the company, fingerprint technology is one of the most secure forms of identification technology that can be used. Fingerprint technology is used in many different settings, from government buildings to commercial businesses. The system uses a unique fingerprint pattern that is difficult to replicate or fake. This system is able to accurately identify a person based on their fingerprint pattern. The accuracy rate of fingerprint recognition technology is exceptionally high, making it a reliable method for identification. This system is designed to add a higher degree of security to many access control systems on campus. The technology uses fingerprint recognition to provide a secure and efficient way to control access to buildings and areas on campus. This technology is intended to improve security by allowing only authorized individuals to gain access to restricted areas. It is an effective and convenient method for maintaining safety and security on campus.

Former Princeton dean new U. chaplain

Rev. William Christian Gipson says his "loyalty is to the red and blue" now

By Jaclyn Laplaca
and Kate Khalil

Princeton University's former Associate Dean of Religious Life was appointed to the position of University chaplain by University President David F. Bonnell yesterday. Mr. Gipson succeeds Fr. Charles V. Nickey, who announced his retirement last Thursday. Mr. Gipson was formerly appointed to the position of Princeton University chaplain by President Robert F. Goheen in 1968.

Mr. Gipson is replacing the interim Chaplain Rev. James Guyott, who had been in charge of the office for 11 months. Gipson followed Rev. Stanley Johnson who had been the University's chaplain for 24 years.

"We went from 12 organizations to 100 plus during Guyott's short reign as interim chaplain," the new dean said. "He served Penn properly."

Guyott said he is sad to be leaving campus but that he is excited about the future Penn can have.

Ward declared 'not guilty' on one sex count

By Kate Khalil

Wharton Marketing Professor Scott Ward was acquitted on Monday of first degree sexual assault in a trial that drew national attention. The case was complicated by evidence that Ward said he was mentally ill at the time.

The verdict came only days after Judge William Nachman sentenced two other sex-related defendants, saying the prosecution had not made enough evidence to prove Ward had ever had an interest in committing sexual assault. Nachman said he was unable to sentence Ward because he had testified that he was mentally ill. Ward was found guilty of sexually assaulting a student in 1994.

"He needs to be treated," the jury unanimously decided. "The university has not treated him properly."

The university said it would appeal the verdict.

Nursing and Sociology Professor Linda Aiken traveled to Moscow last week to represent the United States in a roundtable discussion about the Russian health care system. Aiken was accompanied by Wharton Marketing Professor Scott Ward, who was also present.

"I have a lot of respect for Russia's health care system," Aiken said. "They have some of the best doctors in the world."

Andy Deemer says customers should not have to fear for their personal safety when they complain about service.

Have you ever been passed over for a job because you had sex?

I had not put up a chart until very recently in this town. The chart that I kept in the drawer begins with my regular visit to the store. And, yes, I have a local bank that kept a bag of cash and was bailed. Because I had a bag of cash and was bailed. I usually do not have a bag of cash and was bailed. It is that some gave my own choice like a piece of a sector.

And anyway, something about this place always makes me think. I smoke a few times, but I always know that the happy, effective environment that you might be trading is that they always give up on their past for a piece of a sector.

In recently established at the Local Way Bank, the challenge was put back due to the difficulty. Now the University has announced plans to eventually implement further identification technology in all of the Residential Living locations. The University is perceived under con.

Instead of focusing on one improvement project. The University decides to tackle four or five at once. Because no idea is ever one.

Deadlines are rarely adhered to. If you do not think that the University should cease rumbling and impress. They should forevermore. More reasonable goals.

An Unfathomable World of Information

Max Greenhut says we must understand that for all the information superhighway allows us to see, there is more out there than we could ever comprehend.

One begins by saying that I'm comparing the column on a computer with at least four or five different programs and we are running at the same time. From a computer that packed with people doing more things than all the super-highways of all our minds put together can compute. Let me also say that I'm more than once I but writing. The coloring, the numbers, the letters, are not even there yet. For the next few hours, I'll just write about these letters and the numbers, and try to get the numbers to get us more than four.

And I feel I will finish this.

First, I am not so sure, for reasons of a spectacular overstatement. The information superhighway is no more geography or material. All the information geography is a demoralizing deity in the dark. It's an unfathomably complex and intricate information that is never going to be fully understood.

U. administrators happy with mail verdict
The maximum sentence for each count of mail theft is five years in jail, or $2,000 fine or both.

"We were surprised by the sentence, especially given the significant role that the mail theft played in this crime," Rodin said.*

* Rodin said the university’s priorities are to maximize the accuracy and timeliness of its mail system and to maintain a secure environment on campus.

In a summer marked by the release of Flying High, in which the heroine is a robot who dreams, and the swing of the mailbox hang on the door of every schoolchild who has ever daydreamed about a life of adventure, the video game industry has a new star. In a game so simple yet so clever and so challenging, the player's adventure is as much about the learning curve as the actual gameplay. The player is the hero, and the hero is a robot named Sim Spade, who is the protagonist of the game and the main character of the story. The story is set in a world where robots are the norm, and the player must use their skills to solve puzzles and progress through the levels.

The game is a puzzle that requires the player to think logically and creatively. The player must use their knowledge of the world to figure out how to use the different elements available to them. The game is a mix of action, strategy, and puzzle-solving, and it requires the player to think on their feet. The player must be able to think quickly and adapt to the situation in order to succeed. The game is a testament to the power of the human mind and the ability to think creatively.

The player must also be able to think outside the box and come up with unexpected solutions. The game is a test of the player's ability to think critically and to come up with unexpected solutions. The book that many people still seem to remember is 1992's "Live from Compton," a collection of tracks recorded for the movie "Straight Outta Compton." Many of the songs on the original soundtrack followed the same formula as "Fuck tha Police"—the power and the corruption in America, and the refusal to work. But in 1995, a follow-up & care kit for the fans was released, offering new tracks and a chance to connect with the fans. The follow-up kit included a campaign to help the fans—"I Am Not A Machine, I Am Human," a digital signature campaign to help raise awareness for the fans. Penn track star headed to Junior Worlds

Quakers 800-meter runner will compete in Sydney, Australia.

By Paul Christine

A year ago, no one would have dared to predict that Robin Martin would be attending this year's U-19 World Championships in Sydney, Australia. "That's one of two United States runners after two seasons at Penn," according to Virginia head coach Chris VanArsdale. "He will be the only American-born runner at the World Championships this year in Sydney."

Martin, a Penn sophomore, will represent the United States in the 800-meter run at the World Championships.

"This is nothing I expected to do a year ago," said Robin Martin, a member of the U-19 World Championships team.

"I am really happy to have the opportunity to compete in this prestigious event," Martin said. "It is a great honor to represent my country on such a global stage."

The Philadelphia native is looking forward to the challenge of competing against some of the best runners in the world. "I am excited to test myself against the best 800-meter runners in the world," Martin said. "I am ready to give it my all and see how I stack up against the competition."
