Native American students face big hurdles in proving their cultural ties to being American Indians, according to a student leader who saw things from all over the University community gathered yesterday at 13th and Chestnut streets. Also, disputes continued far west of the center of campus — near Van Pelt Library last week. A College freshman arrested last week for allegedly setting fire to the Phi Gamma Delta house is expected to plead "not guilty" today.

A 1 1/2-month investigation conducted by the University found that police officers did not use excessive force when arresting a player to the hospital. The incident occurred at about 6 p.m. October 30 when a University Police officer approached and talked to a player. That's exactly what happened last week at the library that was com- plaints by student John Knickerbocker. He said that a library employee told him that they could not let him into the building because he was not a member of the library's staff.

College Dems, Republicans react to State of the Union

By Steven W. Appelbaum and Edward Szwarc

College Republicans and College Democrats at the University of Pennsylvania, the two largest student political groups, had competing reactions to the State of the Union Address delivered by President Bill Clinton on Wednesday, January 28, 1996. The address was widely considered to be the most significant speech of Clinton's presidency, and it was broadcast on national television to a broad audience.

The speech focused on a number of issues, including the budget, health care, and international relations. Clinton proposed a balanced budget and called for a comprehensive health care reform package. He also discussed his plans for foreign policy, including the war in the Persian Gulf.

Clinton's address was met with mixed reactions from the two political groups at Penn. The College Republicans, led by Paul Ruffini, expressed support for the president's proposals, while the College Democrats, led by William Ginsburg, criticized them.

The debate was particularly heated because of the ongoing Monica Lewinsky scandal. Clinton's personal conduct was a major topic of discussion, and the College Democrats were divided on whether to focus on the president's personal actions or his policies.

College Republicans and Democrats at Penn faced challenges in unifying their groups and working together on political issues. The conflict between the two groups was a reflection of the broader political divide in the United States at the time.

Native Americans at Penn face challenges

Native Americans have faced challenges in the United States. They have been unable to agree on federal policy, and the issue of reservation lands has been a source of contention.

Native Americans at the University of Pennsylvania have been working to address these challenges. They have formed various organizations to promote Native American culture and advocate for their rights.

The University of Pennsylvania has a strong Native American student community. They have created a Native American student organization to promote cultural awareness and advocate for their interests.

Members of the University community will get their first glimpse of the University's upcoming bid to the Chinese government. Potential speakers were asked to request time by January 5. All requests that were not submitted to the office of the Secretary of the last Wednesday will only be accommodated. The highest decision will be made by the University Council Secretary Corp. Goodman.

The Secretary of the last open forum, in December 1996 — are scheduled to address issues such as the effects of Pittman on students, the University community or the UA. The UA orders Perm to perform rec facility improvements yet to sway the Trustees, who voted against the recommendation.

The report and recommendation was not set in stone and was not yet embraced by the UA, he said. "We can't do much to people's needs because of different expectations." However, the UA and the administration are in agreement on one point — that the new facilities, when built, would have a positive effect on student life. The UA resolution noted that "fitness and recreation are extremely valuable to bringing students and future parents to campus."}

IFC hands out at least 493 pledge bids

By Jeremy Ratte

Two weeks of uncertainty, tough choices and lavish parties came to an end last night, as the Inter-Fraternity Council concluded its rush period by offering 493 bids to interested students.

Greek officials said half of the IFC's chapters offered no members as in past years, which they expect will add an additional 100 to the total, bringing the total to between 550 to 570.

And although it is uncertain how many of those receiving bids last night decided to pledge, increasing membership strength for the fraternity will not be difficult, according to Incoming IFC President and College sophomore Matt Baker.

"If I had to make a guess, I'd say it would be at least four or five fraternities — in addition to the usual fraternities — in the next few months as the department begins moving into the new building during winter break."

The new building also has holding cells and that message is simple: the cost of living and doing business in Philadelphia is coming down," Rendell said to overwhelming applause.

The budget also includes funding for additional police officers at the Penn Museum and the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

He also noted that although such a cut was originally planned for 4289 percent a year ago, the department received some federal funds to enhance the department's technology, which has helped to offset the anticipated cuts.

The mayor also proposed $750,000 for construction of the regional pedestrian center, which is connected to the University of Pennsylvania's School of Education and the Veterinary School.

Such funds, according to Rendell, will enable the department to serve 1,200 children at 100 sites across the city. Rendell said the money goes toward the cost of food, medical aid, and counseling for these children and that it will create "a long way to provide service to the West Philadelphia area."

The budget also includes funding for additional police officers at the Penn Museum and the Philadelphia Museum of Art. The mayor also proposed, amid much applause, that the city dedicate a supplemental retirement in the school district. The Philadelphia police school budget is separate from the main city budget. The center also has a terminal staff and medical supplies.

"We are doing something about it," Rendell said yesterday.

The mayor's proposal allots $358,3 million for the Philadelphia Police Department, accounting for about 7,100 police officers — Philadelphia's police force is the largest in the United States. The city is beginning to attract a new generation of police officers.

The department began moving into the new building during winter break. The mayor said yesterday.

SPORTS

TOMORROW

The last weekend of January is always an exciting time for Princeton athletics. We begin previewing the action, including the start of winter tennis.

Cornell's Aubrey looks to control pivot in the Palestra

Jeffrion Aubry's 6-11 frame has made him the Ivy League's premier shotblocker for the last two years.

By Marc Edelman

He's not exactly Mamba, but in the eyes of his teammates, Aubry is the man. When the senior center has the ball, the offense knows it has a chance to score.

"Jeff is the man," senior point guard Ross Jones said. "When he's on the floor, you know you're going to be in the game." Aubry's presence is a big part of the reason Cornell allows just 60 points per game, which is the second-lowest average in the Ivy League.

In the Ivy, the entire Princeton basketball team has its best chance to impact the game on defense. Aubry leads the way, often guarding a top opponent and controlling the pivot. He's one of the top players in the country and is at the heart of Princeton's defensive strategy.

"It's his job to control the pivot," said head coach Mike Krzyzewski. Aubry is the team's anchor and is known for his shot-blocking ability and strong rebounding skills. He's also a threat from beyond the arc, hitting 38% of his three-point attempts.

In addition to his defensive prowess, Aubry is a threat on offense. He leads the Ivy in rebounding and is second in blocks per game. He's also a solid free-throw shooter, hitting 78% from the line.

"He's a very good rebounder and very good scoring weapon," Krzyzewski said. "He's a totally different kind of player from former Ivy League center Brian Giguere." Aubry has been named to the All-Ivy team in both of his seasons and is a darkhorse candidate for Ivy League Player of the Year.

Blow the whistle at the end

A Big 5 basketball game may be the most exciting sporting event to watch, but all of the sports teams crossed into the Palestra can be counted by three people who do their jobs poorly. With just 13 seconds left in the game, Penn scored a layup to tie the score at 64-64. The next possession belonged to the Quakers, who had possession at the buzzer.

"I was really disappointed in the way we played," said head coach Jerome Allen. "We had an opportunity to win the game, but we didn't make the most of it." Allen was particularly critical of his team's performance on the defensive end, saying they allowed too many easy buckets.

For Penn, the victory was a much-needed boost as they entered the final stretch of the season. With a 9-8 record, they are in contention for a spot in the NCAA tournament.

SQUASH

The men's squash team traveled to the U.S. singles championships and defeated Williams and Amherst colleges.

By John DeFelice

Williams and Amherst colleges defeated the Penn men's squash team by identical 7-2 scores.

"The thing that stands out is the competitiveness of the players," said head coach John Marmot. "They push us to the limit and make us work hard to earn our victories."

M. Squash loses two in Mass.

Williams and Amherst colleges defeated the Penn men's squash team by identical 7-2 scores.

By John DeFelice

The Penn men's squash team traveled to Massachusetts on Saturday and faced two tough opponents. Williams and Amherst each had a strong showing in the matches.

"These are two of the best teams in the Ivy League," said head coach John Marmot. "We knew it was going to be a tough test, but our guys put in a solid effort."
