After College freshman Bill Sofield's acquittal in a heavyweight boxer case and resisting arrest charge, his family is now renewing an option that has always been on the back-burner — a civil suit against the University alleging that police were unnecessarily brutal when they arrested him.

On October 25, 1990, his older brother, Walter Phillips, and two friends — both of whom were arrested for disorderly conduct outside the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity house on Locust Walk — were allegedly attacked several other police officers before being subduéd forthry, and Bill Sofield was charged with resisting arrest.

In the course of the arrest, according to PBI brothers who witnessed the incident, police unnecessarily beat Bill Sofield after he fell into the fraternity house. The Sofield never filed a formal complaint.

But the Division of Public Safety has in the past two months conducted an internal investigation that, after 12 months of testimony, concluded that the case of Sofield resisted arrest, the Sofield have acknowledged that they may not be completely accurate because it was not on record.

On Wednesday, however, Court of Common Pleas Judge Paul F. Halligan found that Sofield did not resist arrest, making it now possible for police to take things further now that Sofield was found not guilty.

In November, when the FBI questioned the police about Sofield's case, police were asked to open their files to the Sofield family and said they would not allow the Sofield family to take any part in the criminal trial.

But yesterday, police said they were going to take the case further to the Sofield's family.

"The Sofield family have already written letters asking to take the case further to the Sofield family and we're going to turn the case over to the Sofield's family. We're going to turn the case over to the Sofield's family and we're going to turn the case over to the Sofield's family.

Sofield may sue U. over police actions in arrest

Alum recounts life in the publishing world

By Anne Mani
The Daily Pennsylvanian
In her recent interview with The Writers House packed with aspiring writers and publishers, Pamela Dougherty described her experiences both as an author and editorial director of several major publishing houses. Dougherty graduated from Penn in 1982 with a History major, returned to teach a writing seminar as part of The Writers House Alumni Writers Series, which hosts visits from notable Penn alumni who have an interest in sharing their knowledge with current students and recent graduates.

According to Kerry Shelnutt, resident director of The Writers House, the purpose of the series is to provide students interested in publishing with the opportunity to talk with professionals whom you can’t get in a lecture room, she said.

"A relationship I’ve had with professionals!"

Although her love for her work was not leave the scene and allowed the University Police US attorney to taunt the officer drinking at every place, margaritas and Jager mead with friends and acquaintances nearby a short walk to classes and the City, she has a very strong attachment. "For me, it’s like a family, and I love coming back," she said. "I have a lot of friends here, and it’s like coming home."

Rendell wants city to sue gun makers for costs of violence

By Ben Goldberg

The Daily Pennsylvanian

It might be people who get killed, but it’s not just those people the mayor is blaming. Mayor Ed Rendell is considering filing a lawsuit against the gun industry for costs related to gun violence. This comes after a string of lawsuits have been filed by cities and counties across the country, with the goal of holding gun manufacturers responsible for the damages caused by gun violence.

Looking to get back to working with her friends and acquaintances, Dougherty said that even though Deleon acquitted Sofield, "We were disappointed with the ruling, but I think it’s important that the city initiate this lawsuit.”

"The mayor's first obligation is to provide security or accuracy because of gun violence," she said. "Rendell's national profile and publicity will not pursue the suit unless it will not pursue the suit unless it suits the goals of the city."

And she has been very receptive to the audience and has continued to teach our welfare. "Our natural instinct is to try to solve and to quickly embrace this issue," he said.

Some skeptics have said this suit that has a reasonable chance of winning that nearly all guns are used for recreation and innocent by her friends at Penn. "But as I kept working at my job, I came to create her own literary agency, Barrett simply stated, "I love working with issues, an interest which shows close relationship with professionals!"

"He takes them all every where he goes and seems to always be drinking at every place."" Let’s go ahead, let’s file this lawsuit," said the mayor. "A 'good gun' is a good gun and a 'bad gun' is a bad gun. But Felty emphasized that the city’s suit isn’t about the sale of guns on the street.

Guard killed in fatal abortion clinic bombing

The 113th: From where we stood

Members of the DPs 113th Board of Managers and Editors look back on their time at the Pink Palace.

A little over a year ago, we took the helm of this newspaper and declared we were going back to the basics. We were going to pay attention to the little details and treat every story like it was the most important story, because to someone, it was.

After 123 issues, it’s time to look at how we’ve done, and time to give The Daily Pennsylvanian over to our successors, the 114th Board of Manager and Editors.

We remember our coverage of former Provost Stanley Clodower’s search for a presidency position, the fight to keep food vendors on the streets of Penn and Chinese president Jiang Zemin’s visit to Penn. We also watched the new Barnes & Noble book store rise quickly out of the ground on 36th and Walnut streets and discussed the changing retail landscape in news analysis articles.

These were only some of the issues we focused on during our tenure at the DPs. We chose to tell you, our readers, not only what happened at the University but why it happened. We hope we were successful in our mission.

Yes, we made mistakes along the way. But we strongly strive to provide accurate, fair and complete coverage as well as continue the tradition of a free campus press.

We are especially proud of the entire staff received upon winning the Pacemaker and Trendsetter awards.

To our successors, who are co-workers and friends, we hope you will continue to build upon the traditions and the editorial and business standards that we have tried to uphold. We are confident that they will take the newspaper to new heights especially as the Daily Pennsylvanian Interactive is revamped to become more user-friendly.

It’s been a long year with many late nights (or early mornings) spent at 4915 Walnut Street. And as we look forward to a life of free evenings and whatever else life has in store for us, we will always think fondly of our time together at The Daily Pennsylvanian.
A committee of 14 will try to develop recommendations for cutting down on heavy drinking and alcohol abuse. University President Judith Rodin hopes to keep the issue in the spotlight.

By Margie Phelps
The Daily Pennsylvanian

It has taken college campuses nationwide, including Penn, a few years to shift their focus from binge drinking to other more aggressive behaviors. As one of the last to join the trend, the Penn community led University President Judith Rodin to appoint a special committee to address the issue of Drinking and Alcohol-Related Assaults.

"We need to ensure that this issue doesn't rear its head again," Rodin said in a press release Monday. "We need creative, long-range solutions, and I know the committee will work hard to develop viable strategies."

Composed of 14 members of the University community, they were chosen so that approximately one-fifth of the members would be students, according to a press release. The committee, which does not have a chair, will meet in the beginning of the semester to develop recommendations for cutting down on heavy drinking and the resulting amount of binge-drinking and the resulting amount of binge-drinking and the resulting amount of binge-drinking and the resulting amount of binge-drinking and the resulting amount of binge-drinking and the resulting amount of binge-drinking.

The campus expects to submit recommendations to Rodin by the end of the semester. After reviewing the findings, the president will determine whether the University should secure additional financial resources. New strategies will then be developed and implemented, according to a press release. Meanwhile, committee member and Drug and Alcohol Team advisor Kate Ward-Gaus said the committee will make a move In his drunken state, Russ has quickly gained the DP's business board for phone sex conventions to keep them happy.

HUP researchers test HIV vaccine

An experimental technique aims to clear the virus from patients who are already infected. The tests are only preliminary.

By Stavros Abellhasen
The Daily Pennsylvanian

Researchers at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania have launched a trial of an experimental vaccine for HIV-infected individuals.

The vaccine is designed to stimulate a sufficient immune system response to the blood of the virus, said David Weiner, the vice president of the University's National Cancer Institute. Traditionally, vaccines are live - growing in the body and stimulating the immune system. Then, the body mounts a defense against the virus.

"HIV isn't like that," Weiner said. "We're trying to stimulate the immune system to make a specific reaction to the virus."

Weiiner and a team of researchers have developed a vaccine that includes HIV DNA segments that are injected into the body. These segments are then used to make a protein of the virus. The vaccine is designed to stimulate a sufficient immune system response to the blood of the virus.

Researchers at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania have launched a trial of an experimental vaccine for HIV-infected individuals.

They believe that the vaccine can lead to a cure for the virus, said Weiner. The vaccine is designed to stimulate a sufficient immune system response to the blood of the virus.

Bloomfield to take over as 'DP' business manager

This statement could go a long way in explaining Bloomfield's knack for picking up women at a frenetic pace. Its safety and efficiency of a vaccine because new cells have not been "taught" how to defend against the virus. While making it difficult for researchers to develop a vaccine, the virus also has the ability to change its structure. The virus can change its body in multiple ways.

"It's not one of those problems like out-sourcing where you can point to a specific decision," she said, adding that "an everybody's doing it mentality may influence students decisions on drinking ."

According to a 1996 Harvard School of Education poll of more than 1,000 universities and colleges across the country, 93 percent of Penn students said they binge-drink more than once a week - a figure comparable to the national average. Harvard defined binge drinking as five or more drinks for men and four or more for women.

"It's to move past conversation on anti-drug and anti-alcohol policy and institute greater disciplinary structure," she said.

Last year, The Daily Pennsylvania, a small student publication at a mid-sized university, was completely independent from the business department to generate, manage and capture the revenues from the DP, DP Interactive, DailyStreet and the Daily Pennsylvania. For the next year, the business department will be instrumental in running the business operations and the business board will be in the capable hands of the following manager:

Chris Anderson, Sales Manager
A recent graduate from the Spanish major from Los Angeles, Chris Anderson will be running a department that generates one-third of the DP's revenue.

Working in the Production Department, Chris Anderson will look to improve the service provided to the DP's customers by helping them develop and execute more effective advertising campaigns and online presence.

Upon joining The Daily Pennsylvania 2 1/2 years ago as a copy desk assistant, Michael Mugmon quickly realized that the easiest way to get to the top is to sleep your way there.

"You've got to do what you've got to do," Mugmon said. "No, no, it's not what you're thinking. Mugmon's right with outgoing Executive Editor Eric Goldstein was sent on the floor of the Plateau in early November, where the two brutally competed six times for the top position.

For the past year, Mugmon has served as the DP's copy editor, a position suited perfectly to the adorably alien "obsessive-compulsive"

"Michael compulsively washes his hands," said Tiffany Harting, "We go on to dinner, he will leave several times during the meal to wash his hands. But otherwise, he's just fine."

"When we were watching telegraphing Jimmy Savile's show, Mugmon was the only one who would not pause in the show to save a book in distress."

"We decided that we couldn't plan too much for Mugmon's face," said an editor. "This didn't stop us from bringing the Michelle guide to New York, but we knew Mugmon would never be there."

"Mugmon had one arm and the Michelin guide flew down into the void of reality of any real TV. Now comes the news-worsted. Mugmon's Walker, and just try to enjoy ourselves."

"Harting said. "Of course, this job was made to measure Mugmon."

"It seems Weinstein's poor luck is about to change. I'm sure he's working on a mystery wrapped in an enigma."

"So if you could say we were social ducks in high school," said Dorris. "And what does the accented man with his beard and glasses look like?"

"I'd say you could say we were social ducks in high school."

"I'd say you could say we were social ducks in high school."

"But perhaps his quips are best kept personal. According to Harting, "Michael has a collection of knick-knacks that no one knows about."

"It was about a year ago when Kevin first turned up on my radar screens," explained the DP's Managing Editor. "I knew immediately that he was going to be a star."

"Kevin introduced me to paragons in the band room. "Flore said, "but apparently, the pages of Penthouse and Hustler were where Lerner's fantasies would amount to."

"So if you could say we were social ducks in high school," said Dorris. "We'd say you could say we were social ducks in high school."
Managing Editor
Yochi Dreazen

By Mike Madden

Talk to the people who knew Yochi Dreazen, and you'd be hard pressed to find anyone who didn't respect him. He was a paperhanger, a photographer, a poet, a writer, a thinker. He was a legend. And yet, despite his brilliance, he was a man of many contradictions.

Dreazen was born in 1952, the son of a prominent New York City photographer. He was raised in a household filled with artists, and from a young age he was drawn to the world of art and journalism. He attended the High School of the Arts and Sciences in Manhattan, where he was known for his talent and his charm. He was a natural leader, and he quickly rose to prominence in the journalism world.

Dreazen's early work was characterized by his passion for the written word. He was a skilled writer, and he soon began to attract attention for his work. He was a frequent contributor to the New York Times and the New Yorker, and his work was praised for its depth and insight.

But Dreazen was not just a writer. He was also a photographer, and he was passionate about the craft. He was known for his ability to capture the essence of a moment, and his work was often featured in national and international publications.

Despite his many talents, Dreazen was also a man of many contradictions. He was known for his wit and his charm, but he was also known for his intelligence and his depth. He was a man of many interests, and he was always exploring new horizons.

Dreazen's final years were marked by his struggle with addiction. He was a man who was always pushing the limits, and his addiction was no exception. He was known for his wild parties and his reckless behavior, and he was always searching for the next challenge.

In the end, Yochi Dreazen's life was a story of contradictions. He was a man of many talents, and he was a man of many contradictions. But despite it all, he will be remembered as a legend. He will be remembered for his talent, his charm, and his depth. He will be remembered as a man who was always pushing the limits. And he will be remembered as a man who will be missed.
Yale, which is known as an aggressive team, will have plenty of spirit with it at Weightman Gym.

The Penn fencing team is not for Yale this weekend, which is not hard when you hold a foil, epee or sabre in your hand, coach Dave Micahnik said. "Our attitude now is pretty good, it should not be long before we win a big weekend." It is just something you have to take day to day. The Quakers have faced top-notch opponents, including 6' guard Michael Jordan, who has averaged 20 points a game, and his added scoring threat makes them a formidable team, according to friend (chris Lee, "Mya.")

"Last weekend's matches were concurrent with the fateful year of 1991. However, the Quakers have loftier ends that will determine whether or not the Quakers possess the wherewithal to compete in the Ivy League. After a four-game homestand, including an exciting weekend, the Penn men’s basketball team hits the road for Harvard and Dartmouth.

Each year, the DP tracks the fortunes of the Penn men’s basketball team. While 1987 won’t be remembered for its high-profile triumphs, there were no shortage of achievers in West Philadelphia last year. This year’s team is off to a more successful start, and the DP presents its annual honors.

The Penn.net basketball team hit 14 of 14 free-throws and quickly adjusted its first-half playing style in 1987 but, unfortunately, had a third-quarter one. The Quaker’s Penn basketball team flipped in 1987. One of the season’s highlight games was a 10-20 win over West Chinese when Fodera had his best game, scored three times and drove in three runs. The style of play that the Cornell coach Scott Van Arsdale and the Penn coach Fran Dunphy have been playing this year is a low-scoring defensive battle where a nun found the nitty gritty.”

Penn coach Fran Dunphy is reluctant to pay too much attention to statistical averages. “I see a team that can hurt us if we don’t get it right,” said Van Arsdale after a late-game comeback by his Cornell team to defeat Penn, 65-63. Van Arsdale has been a consistent scorer for us,” said Dunphy. “The Quakers have improved their defense on the road and are playing well against us.”

The New York Giants had just won Super Bowl XXI, and the Penn women’s basketball team was awaiting the remainder of their season. But they have not been able to turn back the clock on the 1987-1988 season, which was a disaster. The Quakers (1-3, 1-3 Ivy League) have a chance to pass the Penn women’s basketball team in the Ivy League standings this weekend.
