Officials said only a handful of incidents would require parental notification.

Although the University is considering a new parental notification system for alcohol-related incidents, the program is not likely to affect most students at all. On campus, the University has a policy against students committing crimes, which may include alcohol-related offenses. The University is likely to take stricter measures if crimes do occur.

In the case of incidents such as face painting for children in the community and the Interfraternity Council will join other students and community groups to organize a three-on-three basketball tournament at 43rd Street and Chester Avenue where parents can attend and support their kids. The Interfraternity Council will also hold a number of events for Greek Week at various locations across campus.

After several years of research and planning, Penn officials announced their plans to lease the warehouse space on Locust Street to a group of faculty members who will use it to develop an apartment and retail complex. The new Westside Commons, built for completion in the fall of 2001, will have 26 apartment units, a fitness center, a 10,000 square foot of retail, one floor of office space and a 1/4 mile outdoor track.

a sneaking change and it's not a change that's likely to impact significant numbers of students," Goldfarb said. "And when it does impact them, in our opinion it's appropriate." The University's decision to address this issue was the result of community pressure from students which granted school administrators the right to allocate funds as they see fit. Previously, the law was interpreted by the university to mean that notifying parents was a violation of students' privacy rights.

Genuardi said the Penn has clearly taken a different approach to the problem, explaining that the policy at other schools, like Delaware, have generally failed. As a child, I never knew what would happen as I made my way to school. It could be something as simple as a cat walking in front of me or something as serious as a mugging. I was always aware of my surroundings. As a young woman, I have found this to be true. I have always been aware of my environment, always looking out for potential dangers.

I remember the first time I walked to school alone. It was during my senior year of high school. I was nervous and scared, but I knew I had to do it. I had always been a good student, but I had never felt more vulnerable. I had to prove to myself that I could do it.

I walked to school every day, no matter what. I didn't care if it was raining or if it was sunny. I didn't care if it was cold or warm. I just knew that I had to do it. And I did.

Report of the Committee on Changes to the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act

We present to the Penn community the report of the Committee on Changes to the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), which governs disclosure of certain educational records. The committee, led by Dr. Rich Beeman, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, was comprised of faculty, students, and staff. During its deliberations, the committee focused its concert on changes to FERPA enacted in October 1998 which permit colleges and universities to disclose to parents certain instances in which their son or daughter has violated the school’s drug or alcohol policies. The report provides a framework for considering how, and when the school should notify parents of such instances. It should also be noted that the amendments to FERPA also now permit colleges and universities greater latitude in making public information relating to disciplinary matters involving crimes of violence. The committee will recommend shortly to consider the complex issues relating to this change in federal law.

The recommendations of the committee and its consultation efforts are documented in the report. We are calling for comment on the next phase of the consultation process. In order to ensure that the campus community has time to deliberate and offer its input, we will welcome comments until Friday, October 13. Please send comments to RSB@penn.edu or write to us at 106 College Hall, 3220 Locust Walk. We will also look forward to campus-wide discussions such as the one being planned by the Undergraduate Assembly. We will make a final policy decision after the comment period concludes.

Report and Recommendations of the Committee on Changes to the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA)

Introduction
In response to the October 1998 amendments to FERPA, the President and Provost convened a committee to advise them about what changes, if any, the University should make to its policies on disclosure of certain educational records. In particular, the committee focused on the issue of “parental notification,” i.e., whether and under what circumstances the University should notify the parents of students under 21 who are guardians of students, whether and how to notify parents or guardians about students under 21 who have been found to be in violation of University policies, and whether or how to notify parents of students under 21 who were found to have been involved in multiple violations, serious or repeated.

The Committee first received a recommendation from the Office of Student Conduct and Community Standards regarding a student’s mental or physical health. The Committee recommended that notification occur only for a student found him or herself in serious condition or extreme emergency such as injury, extreme or serious damage to property. The Committee further recommends that notification — any of the following circumstances can trigger notification:

1. The student has had previous minor incidents of underage alcohol possession and consumption or multiple violations involving alcohol or drug possession of alcohol or drug, when the fear that parental notification might otherwise fall outside the notification guidelines.

2. The student has already received a recommendation for notification from the University or from the College Houses.

3. There is a sense that the act of notifying parents should not be punitive or repetitive.

4. The Committee further recommends that notification occur only for a student found him or herself in serious condition or extreme emergency such as injury, extreme or serious damage to property.

The Committee further recommends that, where possible, the student whose parents are notified under these guidelines, be informed before such notification occurs in order to provide an opportunity for them to communicate with their child.

Finally, the Committee makes an additional recommendation: when parents and guardians have been notified of a student’s involvement in crimes of violence, the committee recommends that there be a number of. Radioactive leak injures 3 workers in Japan

The nuclear plant accident is likely the most serious in Japanese history, possibly poisoning 34 others.

YOKOHAMA, Japan — An uncontrolled nuclear reaction was contained at a uranium processing plant in Japan over the weekend, Japanese authorities said, a day after looking radioactive material seriously injured three workers and possibly contaminated 34 others.

Masao Mutoh, governor of the Chiba Prefecture, which contains the plant, had re-confirmed the statement that the reactor had been brought under control at 6:15 a.m. in Japanese time.

The company that ran the plant acknowledged fault. "The accident was the result of a "human violation" of standard safety rules," Makoto Murata, a spokesman for the company, JCO, told the Associated Press.

The radiation levels outside the plant had returned to normal later in the morning and experts said that they did not believe there was a risk to the general public. "We have never known any case where a nuclear reactor was like this," officials described the accident as "very serious" and said the workers had been brought to a hospital not far from the nuclear facility in Japan.

A far more serious 1999 reactor incident within a six-mile radius to stay inside remained in effect, closing this normally busy town and the neighboring town of Inage to an eerie silence.

"We have no words to express our apologies," he said. "We cannot escape our responsibility." The accident may have put 35 pounds of uranium into the tank — well over the 1.2 kilograms used to start nuclear reactors, according to Japanese news reports.

Government officials said the accident spared a gas containing al- pha, beta and gamma radiation into the atmosphere, forcing the evacu- ation of 136 neighbors of the plant. The bill was not designed to block the escape of radiation, com- pany officials said.

For once, the Penn men's cross country team wouldn't have very far to travel. However, the Quakers couldn't compete in the first Philadelphia outdoor meet of the season.

"This is our first race in a while, so we have had a race against our own,” co-captain Matt Clayton said. "This is kind of the bigg ing right this weekend.”

Clayton is referring to this Saturday's race against Villanova and Pennsylvania at Fairmount Park. The Wildcats are ranked third in the districts, while the Quakers are ranked fourth. Explorers are ranked tenth, Penn, at No. 7, in NCAA District II, trails both teams. However, the Quakers have always excelled in the last few races, most notably with an individual first-place win at the Lakeside Invitational by Mark Nelson on September 11.

"We've got two very tough games ahead of us,” Nelson said. "But I feel we are capable of beating them.”

The Quakers were the shortest team at the Lakeside race, which was filled with many of the top teams in the East. Subsequently, the team has shown success in the last few races.

"This weekend’s race will be a difficult one for the Quakers,” Nelson said. "We've got to start the game real fast,” Nelson said. "See what they're made of.”

"We've got to start the game real fast,” Nelson said. "See what they're made of.”

But it’s just as critical as beating Harvard, which has been the dominant team in the Heptagonal Championships and the NCAA regional championships will go to Nationals. However, it hasn't been since the late 1980s that Penn has qualified for Nationals, although now some of the districts recently has made the selection somewhat easier.

"We're not going to worry about BU plus year history,” Powell said. "We base everything on the last results in its first few races are ly prepared to do well.”

Even on Astroturf, Crimson will be tough for Field Hockey

By Ryan Kelly

The Houston Astrodome may be losing this season but the concept it introduced continues on the banks of the Charles.

And while this year's conversion of Harvard's Chestnut Field to Astroturf is new, the Quakers' experience of playing on the Turf has been limited. Saturday at Cornell is a true test of their ability to adjust.

"It usually has to play them on grass," Penn senior defender Brooke Jenkins said, noting that the Quakers are much more familiar with artificial turf.

"It makes things a little bit more hasty, a little bit faster," Jenkins said. "It gets rid of the disadvantage of playing on their old grass field."

Even playing on relatively smooth Astroturf instead of rough hewn grass, the Quakers will need any and every advantage they can get to beat Harvard, ranked No. 19 in the nation.

"It's always a tough game [against Harvard]," Penn senior forward Courtney Martin said.

According to Martin, the Quakers have been focusing on executing the simple things. Cloud believes that Penn will provide it the Quakers, however, are concerned about goals, which have eluded them for most of the season.

"We've worked on [scoring] all week, although they are not sure who will provide it. According to Mulhern, senior goalkeeper Gerianne Kauffman, who was nursing short of a sprained ankle in practice last week. Her status is now totally unresolved.

"If Allison's not 100 percent, we won't have to play Kauffman in goal," Mulhern said.

Penn will need both goals and goalkeeping to beat a tough, physical Harvard team and avoid leaving Boston tomorrow [Friday] without a win.

"We're going to focus on Harvard," senior forward and co-captain Mary Lynn Flynn said. "I think we look good."

"I'm not at 100 percent in the crease," Flynn said. "But I think we're getting to beat Harvard, ranked No. 19 in the nation.

"We need this game for momentum, just to turn our season around," Flynn said.

And the Quakers believe that they can get one.

"Nobody's expecting us to win everything right now," Flynn said. "We've got nothing to lose, do we?"
Leopards give Volleyball chance to work out kinks

"I think that part of it is that since we are a good team we come out overwhelmed and come out just expecting to win," Bucknell defender specialist Alexis Embidian said. "We've been working on mental toughness a lot, and I think that we need to learn how to compete and that helps us to get into a rhythm that way but we're looking to be more mentally prepared.

"The team has been doing a lot of mentally challenging stuff this past week and has been having the athletes work out the kinks as a team.

"Something really great happened in this program," Major said. "We came out slow in this serve receive drill but were able to regain focus and turn things around. We had just finished a lighter serving drill and came out relaxed. I saw some real read errors emerge today. The key is changing it before it gets too bad."

Although the Leopards are one of the weaker opponents on Penn's schedule this season, the Quakers have been competitive in a full game and leads the team with 18 yards on 27 carries.

"It definitely allows us to be more rested and come into a game fresh and be able to make a difference," Ryan said. "It's sometimes hard to get into a game when you don't have that as an option when we're in the game."

As an additional to the similar defensive formations and strength, Penn and Bucknell also utilize the same offense formations. Furthermore, Bucknell's offense also features a running back-by-committee game plan. However, unlike Penn, the Bucknell's three running backs have contributed relatively equally. No single rusher averages more than 6 yards per game. However, as a team, Bucknell has averaged 7.3 yards per carry.

"There are a lot of us but we've been successful because of the depth of our bench," Ryan said. "We've had a lot of good competition amongst each other on the depth chart."

On both offense and defense, Penn and Bucknell football eerily similar. The Daily Pennsylvanian

WASHINGTON — For picking at the song at the other team's dressing room area immediately following the game, Blackhawks general manager George McPhee ended up with a cast on his right thumb, a ripped suit, a $20,000 fine — and a two-game suspension. McPhee was fined and suspended until November 1 by the NHL for his action. No one makes you a prisoner except Let go of b[Jen not rightful your own. Give The Gift Of Life
