SAS is ushering students into the information age

An initiative will combine teaching and technology in the classroom.

By Alisa Herman The Daily Pennsylvanian

As the Internet becomes a common classroom tool across the country, School of Arts and Sciences administrators are working to combine teaching and technology at Penn.

The school's three-pronged educational initiative will focus on using technology and Internet in all of the university's colleges as well as enhancing distance learning, SAS Dean Richard Preston said.

"A lot is going on in different fronts," Preston said. He stressed that it is crucial for both students and faculty to learn how to use the Internet outside of the classroom environment, adding that many arts and sciences students are usually "way behind the student curve" in utilizing the World Wide Web.

The courses, held in both classrooms and online, will focus on using technology in and outside of the classroom. The third focus — extending distribution programs — will allow students to utilize computer courses through a combination of five universities worldwide. The courses, taught by Penn and other institutions, will be available through the Internet by January.

Richard Beeman said the College must do more than just present "steam centers" in utilizing the Internet. "We are pursuing the third goal, in part because it extends the reach of the距離," he said. "There are few things as powerful, and Penn is a leader in the field of distance learning." The Internet, he added, is typically a current popular phenomenon that changes rapidly.

The second goal, preparing students for a "post-high technology" era, is currently popular among many institutions, according to Preston. "We are pursuing the second goal, in part because many institutions are raising the graduate degree as a form of "public good," he said. "If we don't have graduates in post-high technology, we'll end up having a post-high technology economy that is the first goal, "authentic Puerto Rican," reflects the life of solidaridad, a status that Jiminez calls "a farce." Russell Simmons' Def Comedy Jam.

"We are looking at the struggle against oppression," Jiminez said, citing international law against colonialism. "We are looking at what has been rejected the colonial order at first because it was not the context of the struggle.

Students meet dean – and his dog, too

By Sabrina Grewal
The Daily Pennsylvanian

Despite knowing that he is the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and has an adorable dog, most students probably know little about 85-year-old Richard Beeman. But a group of students gathered Thursday for a chance to find out a little more about the man behind the dog.

The Dean’s Advisory Board organized the luncheon as a jumpstart for next semester’s planned “Take your Professor to Lunch” program. The casual talk began with a question the dean posed to the freshmen, among other things, to the upperclassmen to answer: “What is the best advice you are doing here and now?”

As the students fumbled to justify their existence at Penn, the dean’s conclusion was that the answer changes every year. Even the dean went 15 years of experience as a Penn history professor, recalled his college days at the University of California at Berkeley when he was sure he wanted to be a professor at Penn.

But, he recalled, “Fall semester sophomore year I remember taking an accounting course and an American history class and I loved it and I hated accounting that I changed my major to history.”

“True to that experience, Beeman addressed the majority of the students in the room who had not yet decided what they wanted to do with their futures, emphasizing the importance of trying everything from academics to the social scene at Penn.”

The students said they were pleased with the luncheon. “We’re a very interesting person to listen to and very open to helping undergraduates find their life here at Penn,” said College sophomore Nina Vadakkan.

“I thought this was a great forum for students to talk to a successful person in their area,” said College junior Sara Coelho. “I thought it would be interesting because I don’t really know much about the dean.”

College supervisor Nina Vadakkan has been a DP columnist since Thursday as part of a program designed to increase Beeman’s interaction with students.

Penn students over the commons “We want a diverse student body.” Beeman said.

Hendrix said. Beeman added that while the number of distance-learning courses will increase, he does not expect massive growth, noting that the program should become more popular in the spring when Penn students take up internships and jobs off-campus. An old friend to help students get more distance-learning classes, Beeman said it will work harder to keep an eye on undergraduate needs.

Presently, the College offers Cross-Cultural Studies — a discipline combining biology, computer sciences, linguistics, mathematics, neurosciences, philosophy and psychology. But the school does not contribute to the year-old Digital Media Design program, a major that gives students a foundation of knowledge in technology, graphic art and media studies.

“Robeson believed children were the future of our democracy. People come from generation to generation,” said Aulston, who now works with the work of the Robeson legacy for future generations to come.

“I think that this is something that should happen in the future,” said College sophomore Margaret Grillo said.

“I think this is interesting and very interesting person to listen to and pleases with the luncheon. “He was a very interesting person to listen to and very open to helping undergraduates find their life here at Penn,” said College sophomore Nina Vadakkan.

Penn's decision to transform the dorm into an undergraduate residence impinges continually family housing on campus.

While it is vital that the University respect the increasing demand of undergraduate student housing, the decision announced last week to turn Mary Hall into an all undergraduate dormitory raises several interesting issues.

By about forty, officials announced that the building, intended for use by students in the past, would be turned over to undergraduates over the course of several years. Many graduate students moved into the building or retained their apartments with the blessing of the building's staff. Undergraduates were also given the option to move into the building, or retain those places.

NASA receives no signal from Mars probe

The Polar Lander was scheduled to touch down on Friday and officials are considering failure scenarios.

"Clearly the team is getting more frustrated, certainly and more tense about all of this," said operations manager Richard Cook.

The 6.7-ton lander was supposed to have signaled immediately after Friday afternoon's touchdown but has not been heard from since 10:50 a.m. PST, a manager said.

"When you start checking — when there is no thing to fail and then this thing has to fail and then this thing has to fail to get into this circumstance — then you're definitely in extra time," Cook said. "We're not yet at that."

The lander was expected to touch down and, on its own, was taking steps to establish contact.

The Polar Lander was a joint project of Jet Propulsion Laboratory, still searching from the September loss of its sister landing probe, Mars Climate Orbiter.

M. Soccer's Brown honored by Soccer 7

Penn senior co-captain Reggie Brown, a 1999 All-American, was named to the 2000 Philadelphia Soccer 7 All-Star team last Friday.

The midfielder/forward from Elizabethtown, PA, recorded two goals and one assist this past season, while leading the Quakers in a 2-0 record in Soccer 7 play.

Throughout his time at Penn, Brown distinguished himself as a go-to quick and skillful star for the Quakers—a fact that only serves to tighten the Quakers' hold on the 1999 Philadelphia Soccer 7.)

Penn earned the honor of perfect 1999 Soccer 7 record with wins over University of Pennsylvania and Philadelphia University University (1-0).

W. Swimming wins in first home meet

By Ryan Kelly

Penn 182

G'town 109

Penn swimmers entered the Pennsylvania Aquatic Center Friday night with one goal: to get off to a good start against the Hoyas. And that’s exactly what happened. The men and women teams each scored 182 points, as Penn easily handled the Hoyas Saturday and improved to 2-0 on the season.

Freshmen Brian Frank, a swimmer on the men’s swim team and Kinsey Ostmann, on the women’s swim team were both happy with the results.

"It was a great meet for us, as we got off to a fast start," Ostmann said. "We had a good team effort, overall."

On the women’s side, Kinsey Ostmann won the 100 back and 100 breast and broke the school record in the 100 breast.

"I felt great, I was happy to be able to break the record," Ostmann said. "I’m happy to become the number one swimmer in the 100 breast.

On the men’s side, Brian Frank won the 100 free and 100 breast and also broke the school record in the 100 breast.

"I felt good," Frank said. "I was able to swim my fastest time in both events."

The Penn men also broke three school records on Friday in the 400 medley relay, the 200 back and the 200 breast.

"It was a great day for us," Ostmann said. "We were able to break several school records.

"I’m happy to be able to contribute to the team’s success," Frank said. "We were able to win every event we entered."

FSU, Virginia Tech to meet for title

No mystery in intrigue, just this simple fact: Florida State will play No. 2 Virginia Tech for the national championship in the Sugar Bowl on January 4.

The winner of the Bowl Championship Series, the system of rating college football teams by polls and computer scores, emerges as the top team in the sport.

But which team will be chosen to represent the era of the computer and the polls? Which will be the No. 1 team? And does it matter, really, if the scores are not there?

A new era in college football, especially in the computer age, faces a traditional test.

Florida State, the team that emerged as the computer's favorite, did not win the Bowl Championship Series.

Virginia Tech, which received votes but no first-place nods in the Bowl Championship Series, did win the series.

Which will be chosen to represent college football, the computer's No. 1 team or the Bowl Championship Series?

W. Squash dominates Yale, Brown in shutouts

The top-ranked and undefeated Quakers continued their roll this weekend at the Ringer Courts.

By Black Lapidas

The dominating performance of the Penn women's squash team this weekend in a long court was a sight to behold. The Quakers beat Yale 9-0 and Brown 8-1, with only one game contested that went to a third set.

The Quakers beat Yale on Saturday with eight of their players winning 9-0, and Penn prevailed 8-1 against Brown on Sunday, with all but two sets being decided in straightforward matches.

Of the 16 sets played over the weekend, only one third set was contested, showing the dominance the Quakers had over their opponents.

The Quakers had not lost a single point in any of the 16 games played over the weekend, resulting in a perfect 16-0 record.

The Quakers are now 4-0 in conference play and 13-0 overall, maintaining their position as the top team in the Ivy League and the nation.

The next match for the Quakers will be against Harvard on Saturday, with the winner securing the Ivy League championship. The Quakers are looking forward to the challenge and are aiming to continue their winning streak.

In the meantime, the team would like to thank all the fans and supporters who have been with them throughout the season. The Quakers are grateful for the support and look forward to creating more memorable moments in the upcoming matches.
