Penn students bitter about freezing cold
Freezing temperatures caused some heating problems in both HRS and off-campus housing.

By Eric Dash
Even North Park couldn’t help College sophomore Graham Luke wade the North Pole-drid temperatures and persuade gods of wind that swept across Penn’s campus yesterday.

“It was miserable. I had to walk to David Rittenhouse Laboratory at nine this morning,” said Luke, who was bundled up in a double-layered scarf, sweater and rainproof gloves. “My nose was red but I was pretty much okay.”

Luke added with a wistful tone, “College Republicans!”

“Temperatures in Philadelphia dropped into the single digits yesterday with winds falling near zero or below zero, producing a blizzard that forced Penn students who have experienced an otherwise mild winter to bundle up through the worst of it.”

Since Penn is located near the East Coast to New Hampshire, the temperatures could be expected to be very cold.

New Middle Eastern restaurant comes to 40th St.

By Allya Herron

With the arrival of a new Middle Eastern restaurant on 40th Street by the end of March, food trucks like the Rusty’s and All Eyes Mobile Food will have some stiff competition in University City.

Philadelphia restaurateur Aman Bitar, owner of the award-winning 25-year-old Bitar’s Restaurant on 63rd Street, just signed a letter of intent last month to open a sister establishment in the Hamilton Village complex, according to John Greenwood, a top official for the University’s real estate company.

“We’re looking to set up a place with atmosphere,” said Bitar, who received the lease last week. “This is not a food truck.”

Pending the finalization of the lease, Bitar’s would serve healthy, Middle Eastern dishes for lunch and dinner at the site of the former Cost Prospect Mexican Grill—a fast-food restaurant that went out of business last winter.

The site will require renovations, including its use and new paint, to transform the Mexican ambience into an Eastern Mediterranean setting, according to Bitar, who said he hopes to take part in University City’s progress.

The restaurant will neighbor the Sundance Cinema complex and the FreshFoodRoom specialty food market. Penn officials have predicted that the developments will make the 40th Street corridor a lively commercial zone.

The University is currently negotiating terms of the lease with Bitar.

Greenwood noted that it would benefit the restaurant and the student body for Bitar’s to stay open late.

“By nature, students are late-night folks,” Greenwood said.

Bitar said his restaurant’s second location will offer selections similar to those on the original menu, including Bitar’s signature item—the grilled执导ed vegetable sandwich—which offers the taste of fried falafel for less than one dollar.

“We’re bringing in our $0.95 falafel to you guys,” Bitar said.

Bitar said he will introduce fresh fruit shakes to the menu at the 46th Street site, adding that breakfast items are also a possibility.

Greenwood pointed out that Bitar’s knowledge of the student market should translate into success.

“I think he’ll provide a healthy menu for those who are trying to make their budgets work,” Greenwood said.

Student reaction when they would welcome a Middle Eastern fare to the west end of campus.

“I think it’s going to be a nice flavor to the area,” College bookstore Harris Vil said. “There is nothing like it here.”

Aside from the Sundance complex and FreshFoodRoom, other new retail and entertainment establishments will soon neighbor Bitar’s proposed site.

An independent Middle Eastern music venue may open in early February at 40th Locust Street under the same name.

In addition, a new bagel shop called Izzy and Joe’s will open this semester taking over the property formerly held by My Favorite Muffin.

Experimental poets recite their works at Writers House

By Ratnesh Puri

The Daily Pennsylvanian

As is common for their crafting personalities and differing writing styles, American poets Kevin Davies and Diana Ward read to a near-capacity crowd last night and discussed their craft as part of the PhillyTalks, a series hosted and sponsored by the Kelly Writers House.

"The Kelly Writers House is an integral part of the student body," said the most noteworthy poet and Dining Services, which was out-breaking the results of the dining survey.

"We were able to engage the students, and the Council will hear from representatives of Dining Services survey results and Dining’s reaction to them," said. "We were happy with both the results and the policy proposal." After speaking to the council, the Poet spoke for the event.

"We were able to engage the students, and the "

By holding classes on Martin Luther King Day, along with special programs, Penn best honors King's enduring legacy.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday is a day to be a reminder of the message of the late civil rights leader, and to honor his legacy. To do so, President Judith Rodin has recommended that classes not be held in honor of Martin Luther King Day in the future, believing holding classes is inconsistent with the principles and goals of the holiday.

But the goals of the commemoration — a greater appreciation for America's diversity and interdependence and a deeper understanding of King's message — are not compromised by creating new opportunities in academic and in work. And classes do not detract from an individual's ability to observe the holiday in their own way, whether it is by attending a church service, watching a film, or even by participating in civil rights activities.

Penn emphasizes the boycott for this year. If you think of the boycott as an act of solidarity with those who are struggling, then it is important that we remember the reasons for it and support the efforts of those who are working to make the world a better place.

The small groups that I have been involved with in the past have been very useful in organizing events and in getting the message out. And I think that it is important for us to continue to support these groups in their efforts.

The boycott is a way of saying that we care about the issues and that we want to be part of the solution. It is also a way of showing our support for those who are working to make the world a better place.

I hope that the boycott will be successful and that it will help to bring attention to the issues that we care about.

The College Republicans will also be chartering buses to New Hampshire on the weekend of January 28 to participate in the primaries, said chairman Lisa Marshall, a College sophomore. She said their trip will be in support of Bush, although the organization has yet to come out with an official endorsement.

The College Democrats will also be chartering buses to New Hampshire so that students may support either Bradley or Vice President Gore, said Schein, a College senior and member of the College Democrats. Both groups will also be working with the Presidential Speakers Service to bring the candidates to the University, but Penn will not be hosting any of the presidential debates in the fall.

Independent observers could not extend the extent of the Russian penetration into the city.

UIRUS-MARTAN, Russia — After weeks of fierce fighting, Russian forces penetrated the center of Chechnya's capital, Grozny, yesterday, according to witnesses and a top official of one of the last rebel strongholds. But it was not clear that Grozny would soon fall.

The military's claims could not be confirmed immediately. There was no immediate independent verification of reports that Grozny had been captured.

The city has been the center of Chechen rebel resistance, and its capture would give Russian forces a huge victory after hamstringing military endeavors.

Russia has seized several towns and cities in recent years in and around the center. After facing little resistance in their steady march across Chechnya's northern outposts, Russian troops have reached Grozny for the first time.

Russian troops were pushing into the center from east and west and had established control over parts of central Grozny, said Lt. Col. Konstantin Kukharenko, a Defense Ministry spokesman. "The decisive phase of the liberation of Grozny has started," he said, adding that the city would soon fall.

The military's claims could not be confirmed immediately. There was no immediate independent verification of reports that Grozny had been captured.

The city has been the center of Chechen rebel resistance, and its capture would give Russian forces a huge victory after hamstringing military endeavors.

Russia has seized several towns and cities in recent years in and around the center. After facing little resistance in their steady march across Chechnya's northern outposts, Russian troops have reached Grozny for the first time.

Russian troops were pushing into the center from east and west and had established control over parts of central Grozny, said Lt. Col. Konstantin Kukharenko, a Defense Ministry spokesman. "The decisive phase of the liberation of Grozny has started," he said, adding that the city would soon fall.

M. Hoops can launch at Apollo

The Penn men's basketball team will take on Big 5 power Temple tomorrow. Read all about the Owls' quest to average the last year's loss.

By Rick Lapidos

Wednesday, January 12, 2000

The Owls had a flurry of road action over this past weekend.

By Rick Lapidos

While the average Penn student was frantically studying for his final exams, co-captain and squash star Katie Patrick was gracing us with her presence. Patrick had been traveling throughout the Northeast, playing against numerous club teams on weekends.

Patrick had especially enjoyed a three-day stretch last weekend that saw her squad face off against a group of competitors from Amherst College (Amherst, Mass.), Yale University, and Dartmouth College. She finished the weekend with a 2-0 record overall.

Patrick has an extremely strong team that can be a threat to anyone in the nation. The Owls are ranked 8th nationally, and Patrick herself is ranked 15th in the country.

Jeter to sign record contract

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter is on the verge of becoming baseball’s richest star.

After helping lead the New York Yankees to three World Series titles in four years, the All-Star shortstop was near agreement on a record contract worth about $250 million, two baseball officials said Wednesday.

The Yankees general manager Brian Cashman had been working on the deal with Jeter and his agents, Gary and Tony Civil, since the close of the December trade deadline.

The contract could be as high as $275 million, though the Yankees are leaning toward something closer to $250 million, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity because the agreement has not been announced.

The Yankees exceeded the $180 million limit for a player’s salary under baseball’s new collective bargaining agreement last season. The new deal would give the Yankees a special exception, which would allow the team to go over the limit by $35 million.

The Yankees are believed to be willing to pay Jeter an average salary of about $12.5 million per year over 20 years. The new contract, which is expected to be announced as soon as Friday, would make Jeter the highest-paid player in baseball.

The contract would include a $25 million signing bonus, which would make him the highest paid player ever. He would receive a guaranteed $7.5 million in salary for each of the first 10 years and $8 million for the next 10 years.

The deal also would include buyout provisions that would allow the Yankees to avoid paying the final four years of the contract. The deal would include a $26 million option for the 2010 season.

The contract would allow Jeter to remain in New York for the next 21 years, which would give him plenty of time to retire and later become the Yankees’ manager.

Jeter, who has played in all 11 of the Yankees’ playoff games this year, said he was pleased with the agreement.

“I’m very excited about the opportunity to continue to play here,” Jeter said.

Jeter said he would consider playing in the World Series or even a World Series game for the Yankees, even though he is signed through 2015.

The agreement was reached after a dramatic turnaround for Jeter, who was expected to sign a contract worth $150 million to $200 million.

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter is on the verge of becoming baseball’s richest man.

After helping lead the New York Yankees to three World Series titles in their four years, the All-Star shortstop got his wish this week: a record contract worth about $115 million for seven years, the Associated Press learned yesterday.

Jeter submitted Monday for the 2006 salary arbitration yesterday. A record amount for a player, and the Yankees put it in his pocket this week.

But neither side expects the matter to be a hearing.

Mauresmo out of Australian Open

MELBOURNE, Australia — Amelie Mauresmo crashed from a 6-1, 6-0 lead Monday in the Sydney Tennis Classic and lost 3-6, 6-3, 6-1 to 16th-seeded Jill Craybas, ending her hopes of an Australian Open wild card.

The 2001 singles champion was one of 24 players who failed to progress to the quarterfinals.

"I didn't have any problems with my game," Mauresmo said. "I just didn't have any luck against her. She played better than me. I think she played a little better than me today and I have to move on."

She referred to a 6-4, 6-3 win over British No. 2 Anne Keothavong for her first round. Mauresmo has now played 36 of her 44 tournaments this year without a win.

BLOOMINGTON — It took a few minutes, then a long session in the locker room before Iowa guard Bubba Horne finally accepted the truth.

"It's been a very, very long year," Horne said. "I've never been so disappointed."

The Hoosiers pushed the lead to six points before a first three and three-pointer by Dean Oliver pulled Iowa within 29-26 at the 13:27 mark of the second half. Oliver had plenty of the outside — in Iowa shooters — and more than enough — freshman Samad Rashid backed him with 13 points and Horne added 11 of his 18 points in the second half.

In some ways, college is just like high school. You sit in class, listen, and take notes. At test time, you regurgitate the information you've memorized.

But wait. There's more to college life...

Want excitement? The opportunity to meet new people? The chance to learn by doing, not by watching?

Join The Daily Pennsylvanian.

The DP, the 116-year-old daily student newspaper of the University of Pennsylvania, recently won the prestigious Pacemaker Award as one of the top five college newspapers in the country, as well as the Columbia Gold Crown Award, the highest honor in collegiate journalism.

Students, faculty and administrators look to us as their main source of news and information about the University and West Philadelphia. Local businesses see us as the most cost-effective way to present their message to the lucrative Penn market. In fact, more than 25,000 people read the DP every day.

Most importantly, the DP — a corporation independent of the University — is run and managed by students. Students just like you.

Everyday, we write and edit the stories, shoot and develop the photographs, lay out and put together the news pages. Everyday, we sell and design the advertisements, handle customer inquiries, and develop budgets and financial statements.

As a DP staff member, you'll get the opportunity to learn in the trenches, to apply what you've learned in the classroom to the real world. From reporting and writing to shooting photographs to selling advertisements to designing pages, you don't watch — you do.

And, in all of our departments, you'll begin doing from day one. All you need is enthusiasm, imagination and drive — we'll teach you the rest.
