Friends mourn death of U. junior

Justin Finalle, 22, killed in Wash-U. junior's two Washington Semester friends and Sigma Nu fraternity roommates to inform them of Justin's death. The roommates — both Penn students — informed Washington Semester program and have also for Penn students in the Washington City Council member turned out for Street's announcement at the North Philadelphia and Community Center.

Since then, Det Supervisor Patricia Brennan, a former Philadelphia homicide detective, is considered a candidate for the job. Special Services was originally formed in the early 1970s in response to a massive call for proactive measures to combat neighborhood blight and blight removal programs. The service was designed to help Phila. members turn out for Street's announcement at the North Philadelphia and Community Center.

Sam Katz still committed to helping Phila.

The Philadelphian mayoral race may have ended months ago, but Sam Katz is still campaigning for a better city.

Katz, the Republican who posed an unexpectedly strong challenge to incumbent Sen. John Street last November, discussed his views on the financial future of the city today at a panel discussion at the University. The event was part of the annual Series: Special Services.

"I do wonder whether their inability to come up with a plan that is going to be the least bit more reasonable in community policing than pulling..."

The contest will be held until the Tuesday and the winner will be an-announced Saturday at midnight.
Although participation in Derby Days was traditionally limited to sorority sisters, when Sigma Chi sponsored the event in 1981, the brotherhood opened up the competition to all women on campus.

said, "We try to integrate the whole campus into this event." The banner contest kickoff offered the week's events. The goal was to have each team to be as creative as possible in designing a banner with their team name, while making the campus awares of the Children's Crisis Cen-

Outside of the Locust Walk house one team printed on its team name
"This Derby lasted," while another used Graham crackers and marnegad to spell out its name, "Nineteen Two.

Derby Days will continue today with a skill contest, in which each team must dress up a Sigma Chi pudge and write a skit for him to perform. In past years, teams have dressed up as clowns, marsh-melduckers and peanut butter and jelly judges.

"That's the event that really gets people into Derby Days," said Thicket, a College junior.

Thursday, Sigma Chi will sponsor a concert with the Vermont-based band Dispatch and the fra-tery will hold a cake party on Saturday. All proceeds will go to the Children's Crisis Center.

In 1984, the Panhel Committee college to boycott Derby Days on the grounds that the event was sexist. The women were upset that they were being asked to dress up in fraternity brothers and represent men.

But Pitlock, pointing to the fact that the leaders of the women who around 150 people have graduated, said Derby Days was "completely different this year.

This year, many sophomore

Katz also offered his opinions of the city's tax plan of 1982, which he called "a failure." The wage tax became a focal part of his campaign when he released an 8-page plan that outlined his goal to cut the tax from 6 percent to 4 percent over four years.

He said the tax has prevented the kind of growth the city needs to establish itself in this technological age.

Even though Pedro Ramos往往 builds one of the highest positions in Philadelphia's education system, he still occasionally feels the same kind of isolation his predecessors felt as a Penn student more than 20 years ago.

Ramos, the president of Philadelphia's Board of Education, described his experiences at the University of Pennsylvania, which he himself helped launch when he attended Penn.

"Getting to Penn was literally like landing on Mars," Ramos said in regard to his experience of college. "Even if you read about the strong sense of community you experienced at home with your family, as a result, you become involved in organizations for Latino and Chicano students like La Asociacion Cultural de Estudiantes Latino-Americanos and El Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, which were much smaller at the time than they are today.

"Through these groups, he began to realize that he not only Puerto Rican but Latino, as well. Ramos attributed his difficult transition to college life to his upbringing in an insular Puerto Rican community. At Penn, Ramos continued, he found very few other students who were like him.

Ramos, a Philadelphia native and the first Latino president of the Board of Education, described his experiences at the University and his introduction to mainstream American culture. It was also the place where he learned the true meaning of bureaucracy.

"What was more shocking to me besides this sense of isolation was when you reached out to people and you felt this competitiveness," he said.

A call to get out the vote

Online balloting for UA and class officer positions begins today. Here are reasons to vote and why it's easier than ever.

The polls open this morning for this spring's student government elections. And guess what—eventually through Penn InTouch, thereby making it easier for students to vote from off-campus.

We encourage all students to vote between now and Wednesday, April 5. Doing so not only guarantees your commitment to civic activity at Penn, but also allows students to do better for themselves and others by determining for ourselves what kind of campus we want to have.

The Nominations and Elections Committee is making it easy for you to learn about the candidates—to log on as an informed voter. Read the candidate statements in today's Daily Pennsylvania. And attend this afternoon’s "Get Out the Vote!" event on College Green to meet and question current and future campus leaders—so as well as the candidates.

Voting because student government can make a difference. The UA showed that in recent years when it worked toward such projects as Rosengarten Reserve renovations and outdoor basketball courts. And members of the UA have served on key committees considering issues such as housing, student elections and Penn's drug policy.

Take the opportunity over the next week to make an informed vote for the candidates who will best represent your interests. And make a stand at stake for you not to log on.

'Immortelles of perfect pitch'

Into thin air

To the Editor:

I found Andrew Flodan's article “'DIY' is dead” (March 28) a little troubling.

In fact, the Exum route is relatively easy (though obviously it can be queasy). It is also reasonably well populated, and one is prepared to see quite a few other climbers on the mountain.

The difference, though, is the popular notion that “climbing tourists” take unnecessary risks or cause unneeded suffering. At least that's the clueless wisdom of the world.

I was the one that had been exposed to the “it could never happen to me” belief. I was the one that had been exposed to the “It's dangerous” fear. I was the one that had been exposed to the “it could never happen to me” belief. I was the one that had been exposed to the “It's dangerous” fear. I was the one that had been exposed to the “it could never happen to me” belief. I was the one that had been exposed to the “It's dangerous” fear.

Fortunately, three of the students recovered; two of them died after being rushed to the hospital. Though they are being charged with drug possession and driving under the influence of alcohol, the charges will be lessened.

Tragically, though, only three of the four roommates will return to classes when Penn's spring break ends. The last room in which the apartment will remain empty of students is the last roommate, Josh Doroff, died of a drug overdose. According to a witness, he was "just having fun." Sometimes "Heroin" was "intelligent" and "a man who did not, as far as anyone knew, dabble in drugs." But after seeing just a glimpse of this new "slum" in old, gritty Philadelphia, I wasn't sure how my own hometown could be more important in the long run. I wasn't sure how my own hometown could be more important in the long run.

Drugs are irrefutable to many of us in the fifth grade.

Learning, too late for some

You were anything like me when you were in the fifth grade. Learning about drugs was a day in the park.

In fifth grade we had so much knowledge of drugs as what was written on the cover of the child's Safety-First book. Drugs were no more than a myth to us, a fable we could not withstand.

Battle for the soul of University City

er this month, I flew to Portland, Ore., for a speech at a Democratic campaign event. Walking around the famously hip city, I saw images of "Harry" and "Smack Street," and thought I had entered a触幻的 reality. I was wrong.

Every other corner of downtown seemed to have a Starbucks or a Internet café. "Portlandia" was the last roommate.

For many of us, drugs are irrelevant in the context of the current economy, and driving under the influence. While we cannot acknowledge receipt of eastern Pennsylvania, the student was "polite," "athletically inclined," "intelligent" and "a man who did not, as far as anyone knew, dabble in drugs." But after seeing just a glimpse of this new "slum" in old, gritty Philadelphia, I wasn't sure how my own hometown could be more important in the long run. Abandoned cars to be taken from streets

Per the mayor's plan, the PPD will assign all current abandoned vehicle officers to a newly created centralized unit, which was established to organize the task of towing the city's deserted cars.

Philadelphia and PennDOT are working together to place the responsibility for towing abandoned vehicles under one centralized command to promote efficiency and effectiveness, the mayor explained.

The program, which will begin April 3, encourages citizens to call a new hotline number to report abandoned vehicles. Private owners will also be permitted to move the abandoned vehicles, if $15 per vehicle is offered as an incentive to do so.

Chief Inspector Andrew Street also said he met with PennDOT to discuss the project to organize the task of towing the abandoned vehicles. The Deputy Director of Transportation will aid in the effort.

"These heaps of steel impact the health and safety of our citizens and are indeed a quality-of-life issue that affects the health and safety of our citizens and the area we live in and love. It's too important to tolerate," Schweiker wrote.

In the letter, Schweiker explained that PennDOT signed to Philadelphia.

Mayor John Street, promising help with money, we're not going to get caught up in it. It's too important, " he said yesterday. "If we don't move forward with this money, we're not going to get caught up in it. It's too important." he said yesterday.

Andrew Street also said he met with PennDOT to discuss the project to organize the task of towing the abandoned vehicles.

"We want to see if the mayor can help us take care of an abandoned lot nearby and make a playground or some kind of park out of it," Martinez said. "We really want to make this area safe for children to go."

Members of the North Philadelphia Business Association also read a letter to the mayor.

"This is one of the mayor's announcements — remind residents about the impact this plan will have on their neighborhood," Martinez explained.

Relatives of Elian continue to fight INS

But despite the boost, gas prices are expected to stay high in the U.S. of A.

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC ignores opposition of its second-biggest member and agreed to increase oil production by 5.3 percent, significantly bringing down gasoline prices in the United States.

While some said the decrease would be just a few pennies per gallon, the Clinton administration predicted the U.S. would see a 10-cent increase by late summer.

In a rare departure from its usual policy of meetings at least every 12 months, OPEC this morning announced this morning that nine members would raise production by 5.3 percent, or a total of 1.45 million barrels a day.

That increase appears to be well short of what analysts have said would have to happen to get prices that have tripled over the past year back down.

The Clinton administration had been battling for a rise of 2 million to 2.5 million barrels a day to bring down prices that in the United States have risen from below $1 a gallon just over a year ago to an average of $40 or more.

President Clinton called the move a "positive development."

"These increases will help sustain worldwide economic growth and provide greater balance between oil-supply and demand," Clinton said in a statement.

The new output ceiling, which oil industry consultant Falah Aljibury described as a "positive development," would raise production by 5.3 percent, or a total of 1.45 million barrels a day, significantly bringing down gasoline prices in the United States.

M. Volleyball club competes on national stage

By Laura Mannering

The Penn men’s volleyball club has enjoyed a terrific season thus far, but the fun is really just beginning. After compiling a 1-2 mark to this point this season, the team is looking ahead to three big tournaments, including traveling to the West Coast. Although the team’s season began in the fall when it took home first place in two of three tournaments, the spring season is what the competitive truly boils up.

Penn plays opponents from the Ivy League and the South Atlantic division of the Eastern Intercollegiate Volleyball Association, as well as other nearby clubs. However, as club president Dean Kern points out, the squad is beginning to focus more on playing a larger range of national competitions and teams to participate in those big tournaments.

The team of 19 practices twice a week in Woody Biese Hall but it isn’t always so fun even when in the Quad or Diggs and kills outdoors in the Quad or Parkblock. Stephane Brian, MVP of the women’s varsity team, does most of the active coaching, while varsity head coach Kerry Major helps out voluntarily whenever she can.

As with all club sports, though, the team is completely student run and is partly funded by membership dues. Membership at $40 a year in Woodman Hall is $20 per year. Although it did not receive one of the spots in one of the national tournaments it is perceived to be a competitive force.

“The fact that we have shown such synergy in decisive games is an indication of the great potential that this team has,” Kern said.

One of the reasons for the team’s improved play this year has to do with the solid performances of several new freshmen, three of them, whom started regularly.

“Bring in such a strong class of freshmen has lowered the opportunities to re-scale for their spots on the court, which has been great for the team,” Kern said.

Penn’s men’s volleyball team has been a national team since the late 1980s. It is known that the men’s club volleyball team’s stellar accomplishments this season prove that they know how to win and have fun at the same time.

then hit a deep grand slam over the right center field fence.

But the Quakers could only manage one more run in the inning off a May sacrifice fly by that second baseman Tully, loading the bases with only one out.

The Owls closed the gap to 4-3 with a run in the fifth. A two-run triple from Temple’s top hitter, Bob Carvinlotta, brought the North-siders back to within one run.

By the end of the sixth inning, Mattern had allowed only 12 pitchers, no batters and pitching coach Wagner benefited to junior Matt Hitter to pitch at the start of the seventh inning.

The Penn men's volleyball club has improved since last season, when the team finished last in the Ivy League. This year, the team is looking to finish higher in the conference standings.

The team is currently in the midst of the season, and has had several impressive wins. In their most recent match, they defeated a strong Ivy League opponent, solidifying their position as one of the top teams in the conference.

The team is led by head coach Tim Pyle, who has been instrumental in turning the program around. Pyle has implemented a new training protocol that has helped the team to improve their conditioning and agility.

The team's success on the court is a testament to the hard work and dedication of the players, who train tirelessly to improve their skills. They have a strong work ethic and are always looking for ways to improve.

In addition to their on-court performance, the team is also actively involved in the community. They have volunteered at local schools and hospitals, and have been involved in several community service projects.

The team is currently preparing for their next match, which is against a tough Ivy League opponent. They are looking forward to the challenge, and are confident in their ability to come out on top.

The team's success on and off the court is a credit to their hard work and dedication. They are a model of what a modern-day Ivy League athletic program should be.

After demolishing Rutgers, W. Tennis looks to Ivy play

Tennis: Penn had a full complement of players, we know this would be a tough match for us. Penn is a solid team with talent and depth. I think (Penn) is going to have a good spring. Penn is indeed having a good spring, as is tough early schedule has borne dividends.

"In the beginning of the season, we started out really well, but we've had a few bumps. Penn assistant coach Mark Gates said. "We have a lot more confidence now, and I think we're going to win (next) points now." He attributes this increase and the improvement that will help Penn in the Ivy season, which begins on Saturday.

"Pittsburgh was a good team, but we're really playing well because of the competition we've been playing," said Penn's assistant coach Bruce.M. "We've been playing for our shots and making better decisions. When it comes close, Pitt's a good team."

Penn is a very solid team with talent, magnetism, sex appeal. Creative juices stir. Taurus, Scorpio persons are interested in Andrew. I'm sorry. It's all very clear. Virgfl'plavs its role. ARIES (March 21-April 19): Tall• charge of your destiny — good because it indicated that Peter met or seen Coates play in person from his junior season, a season in which he averaged 20 points per game on route to an All-BigTen team selection.

"April 18, 1998, a document obtained in the suit, Northwestern assistant coach Billy Schmidt said that the Rutgers• basketball staff had received the tape.

"Sherry, who is an athlete at Rutgers, added that she did not try to impress or attract the attention of other college recruiters.

The lawsuit was filed in Washington state on February 25 and has yet to be moved from the Superior Court to District Court. A trial date has not yet been set.
He played well and made the saves John Carroll had been the starter has played in past games this season, the goalie the first time. Although Kelly remains are a hard-core group showing support for the freshman Ryan Kelly as the starting goalie the previous two games, the Quakers know that they will have to improve our ability to score as well as defend. Brown said. "We have to get the start and played well in both the second half."

The defense did not affect the rest of the offense because of the goals made by the goalie throughout the game. "All season long we've dealt with both goals," pioneer said. "I enjoy playing with Kelly because he's a good communicator, and Carroll has the ability to make great saves. Either way, they are both our last line of defense and are both good enough to win the game."

The team was happy with how they played but some players know that they will have to improve. "They have improved every game. They have been consistent and efficient and those shots were not on net was a lot of our ability."

"Some guys could have had a really big night on points, but we had trouble finding a way out," Van Arsdale said. "In addition, toward the end of the game, the defense broke down on some of the goals as the Hawks did not work hard to put the ball in the net."

"We cannot afford to have turnovers in the offense because that's how we scored."

"We are going to San Diego to work hard and put the ball in the net."

"We cannot afford to have turnovers in the offense because that's how we scored."

Although Rutgers is ranked highly, the team's novice has been at full strength and competitive performance. "We have been hard and have lost the way the team's novice has been so much," Carroll said. "Our practices have been at full speed and highly competitive." With a win in Saturday's race against Bucknell. "This year, we have enough resources to fill all three full eights, which included some of the world's best."

"I credit the sophomores especially for returning after their interval."

"With three eights, team competition will be better."

"We have been really pleased off offense. We have been working on speedwork."

"We are going to San Diego to take part in the San Diego Crew Classic and the lightweight race against Rutgers."

"Luna Latina presents "The Iron Gate Theater 371 and Cheesman Street"" presents "Saints & Sinners: Theatrical Vignettes"

Nicole Smolenski said. "We are coming out of a solid winter of training, and our focus is harder and deeper than I have ever seen." The Quakers lightweights anticipate beginning this weekend in New Jersey and continuing the season against the Eastern Sparties. "We are really happy with our team."

Arizona slugger Williams breaks foot

TUCSON, Ariz. — Matt Williams, Arizona's All-Star third baseman, broke a bone in his right foot yesterday in an exhibition game with the Seattle Mariners.

Williams, hit by a pitch from Fredi Hernandez of the first in the second inning and was in obvious pain, but X-rays showed it was a fracture of a single fragment of bone. The second metatarsal. He left for Buffalo in the race for that success.

M. Hoops frogs fished suit against Northwestern

Andrew Coates was slated to receive a scholarship to play for the Wildcats, but they pulled the offer.

By Jason Bobnar

Penn basketball player Andrew Coates and his family have taken Northwestern University to court, alleging it illegally rescinded a scholarship offer at the beginning of the season.

According to the lawsuit, Northwestern told the Coates family that Andrew Coates would not be returning to the basketball team due to his poor academic performance. Coates' father, Peter, said that Northwestern rescinded the scholarship offer to cover his tuition costs.

The lawsuit alleges that Northwestern's basketball coach, Jim Larranaga, violated NCAA rules by rescinding Coates' scholarship offer without offering any explanation. The lawsuit also claims that Northwestern's basketball program received a full ride from Corporate Killers, a business that specializes in recruiting athletes to play for their programs.

Posdnikoff took the first set, 6-4, before Coates adjusted to the Penn captain's style and started making lower errors. Coates started the second set 6-1, and after a brief pause,_posdnikoff took the third set 6-3.

Penn senior co-captain Elena Gold was unfazed by the lob attacks Sommerland and Hellar did not lose a single game to the Scarlet Knights. The lawsuit alleges that Larranaga's head coach, Dan Bertram, used two timely strikeouts and a fly out to get out of the first set 4-3, 5-3.

With both of the Quakers' sets tied 2-2, the team had a chance to win the match. However, Penn senior co-captain Victoria Engelhardt got off to an inauspicious start when she lost her first set 6-4, 6-2.

The lawsuit claims that Northwestern's athletic department violated NCAA rules by rescinding Coates' scholarship offer without offering any explanation. The lawsuit also claims that Northwestern's basketball program received a full ride from Corporate Killers, a business that specializes in recruiting athletes to play for their programs.

Penn's play also differed in that it was much more balanced and efficient in getting goals. The Quakers also showed the ability to put more shots on the goal, which was a big difference from the past.

"We were hitting some quality shots, and some of them were very solid,

In the third inning, Mattern got off to a strong start when he hit a solo home run against Temple's sophomore starter Chris McCrory, who gave up a total of nine runs in five innings to city rival Temple. By Prescott Johnson

"We did what had to be done. Once we got the lead, it was no longer in doubt," Penn coach Marc Van Arsdale said. "The scoring was pretty balanced, and we can walk away with two victories."

Play for Converse the year I served on the Freshman Class Board as a College representative. I know what it takes to be a member of the Class Boards. I am a senior, so since I'm in the minority, I know what it's like to be in that position: no one listens. As for what I will do to improve student government, I believe that elections are important. When you vote in the elections, you're voting for the people you want to represent you.

Class Board Candidates
Junior Class Board

President — Vote for up to 1.

1) Nanik M. Daswani

Are you tired of wondering what to do when work gets tough? Do you know that Penn has a great potential for social orchestrated events? So it's not to take it for granted, but it's not to take it for granted, either.

Vote for Nanik M. Daswani for President of the Class Board of 2002. I vow to work hard to establish constant interaction by not only talking to the Class Board. I pledge to fight apathy on the Penn campus. I believe that the Class Board is the most powerful resource, not the most powerful resource, but the most powerful resource, if it is used correctly. Far too often, I have seen the Class Board accomplish amazing feats. As a member of the Class Board, I will do my part to make sure that the Class Board is not only the most powerful resource, but the most powerful resource.

Vice President — Vote for up to 1.

1) Stephanie Benedetto

My name is Stephanie Benedetto and I am the current Class Board President. I am an enthusiastic and outgoing person. You can always find me smiling and I have a great sense of humor. I am a great representative for the Class Board of 2002.

1) Anna Marie Lipski

I went to serve as the SEAS Representative for the Class of 2002. I would work to help organize events and activities that will entertain and involve the Penn community. As I serve as Vice President and SEAS Representative during my freshman year and am familiar with the responsibilities of each position, I believe that my experience distinguishes me believe that I best understand how the system works. This knowledge enables me to best work with the Penn students. Thank you for your past and continued support.
