Joy Williams, manager of Campus Card Services, is phasing out the PennCash chip as of May 1999. Students, faculty and staff members who have received PennCards in the last month may have been surprised to find that their cards no longer work. The PennCash chip has disappeared.

The Campus Card Services office is phasing out the PennCash chip as part of changes to the PennCash program that are still in the works. Changes to the card will be phased in during the summer and debuted in the fall with a new "Millennium Edition" of the PennCard.

Part of the program will include a replacement system for the "smart card" issued PennCash. A plan is to offer a program that will ultimately replace the chip, said Amy Kizer, a spokesperson for Campus Card Services, adding that more specific plans are still being worked out.

Current cards will not need to be replaced. PennCash will continue to be accepted as the changes to the PennCard are being made. Students receiving the new chipless PennCard will also receive a second one with cards issued before the change. Only 12 outside merchants currently accept PennCash.

"We're starting the planning process to begin a new program, and we'll begin to phase out the smart card — the chip function — through the next academic year," Williams said.

The PennCash "smart card" chip debuted with the last PennCard reissue in 1996 in partnership with PNC Bank, MBNA and the University of Pennsylvania Student Federal Credit Union. The chip was expected to take the place of the QuakerCard, a debit card system run by four Wharton graduates in 1996 that unexpect- edly went out of business in May 1996.

When the program debuted, officials hoped the card would be used both on campus as a credit card and at the bank as a debit card. But those hopes were never fully realized. Only 12 outside merchants currently accept PennCash.

"Williams blamed the problems with the PennCash program on trouble with "the technology," the card associated with the program and the complexity of the program.

"When we began the program several years ago, smart cards and chip technology [were] cutting edge," she added. "PennCash is the best chip card on the market, in the United States, and so people were not sure how to use PennCash."

Because demand for smart chips never reached anticipated levels, few students and the chips and accompanying readers did not drop as expected. Williams also noted that new security procedures regarding that PennCash be issued in certain University buildings began to take effect, some people became wary of using the chip since it potentially held a monetary value.

New certificate for language study

The faculty of the School of Arts and Sciences voted last month to encourage students to pursue foreign language study beyond basic proficiency.

A new certificate in language study will offer recognition to stu- dents who want to take advanced language classes but do not want to fulfill the requirements of a major or minor in a language.

To obtain the recognition, a stu- dent must complete three courses of any type taught in their chosen foreign language after filling that language's proficiency require- ments. The certificate is available to students who choose to study a language's proficiency at the 120 level or above, at the 220 level or above, or at the 300 level or above.

We congratulate the members of the Class of 2000 and wish you good luck in confronting the challenges that lie ahead.

This Monday, the 2,300 undergraduates who comprise the Class of 2000 will take their first steps on the campus of Pennsylvania, and thousands more friends, family members and well-wishers will fill the stands for Penn's 244th annual Commencement exercises.

For many of those wearing the commencemen tal cap and gown, the much-vaunted rite of passage will have come true.

For others, Monday's diploma merely adds one more step in the next in a never-ending learning process.

I must confess, I am a bit uncertain of whether he or she is going to Wall Street or the ivory tower, or if they have yet even chosen one over the other.

Through four years of achievement and evolution, we have all grown, sometimes for the better, sometimes for the worse, and rightly earned your place among the alumni of this institution.

Four years ago, you came to this campus as freshmen with backgrounds as varied as your talents. You came from London, from Tokyo, from Paramus, N.J., and from all over the nation, and held in your hundreds of places in between, and stood out as athletes, musicians and scholars. But next week, you will all leave as a united community a group of friends and classmates who have stood together, come what may.

The bonds you have forged and the memories you have made will be forever, even as your diplomas yield up your true graduates.

Some of these memories are of course of your personal achievement, but for many of you, the most memorable accomplishment was the ability to deal with the challenge of living in a college dormitory. For others, the ability to navigate the subways of New York City. Or perhaps the ability to treat us like children.

While you will not soon be seen by that fraternities, sororities and other college athletics, music or theater groups for the work you did here, you are in no way going to just disappear. Just as you are in the company of those who have made Penn your home, your life here will forever be a part of your history.

When I look back on this landmark, I find myself smiling. Yet, it is only the beginning. For many of those of you who have not yet decided on your careers, you will find that the road ahead is much longer than the one you have just walked through.

The College of Arts and Sciences will have a 1.6 percent yield from a pool of 6,514 applicants. Engineering and Applied Science will have 188 undergraduates, down from 200 last year; and the Wharton School will accept 1,500 students, up from 1,492 last year. Only the Nursing School will have an increase in freshmen students, up to 75 percent. Additionally, 10 percent of the class will consist of international students. Minority students — including blacks and African Americans, Latinos, Asian Americans and Native Americans — will comprise 37 percent of the incoming class. But this figure fails significantly, 11.5 percent, when Asian Americans are excluded.

More specifically, 6.4 percent of the Class of 2004 will be Asian Americans, 6 percent will be African Americans, 5.1 percent will be Latinos, and 6.9 percent will be Native Americans. Class of 2004 will be comprised of international students.

The former GE building, located at 31st and Walnut streets, will revert back to the University of Pennsylvania. The real estate development company Dranoff Properties will pay all construction costs for the building, which will have 285 apartments, a 4,600-square-foot fitness center and one floor of Penn office space and retail along Walnut and Chestnut streets. The Left Bank, previously called Loews, which was previously owned by the university, will be converted to a hotel and will revert back to the Left Bank name. With views of the Philadelphia Museum of Art and the land and the building, developers will begin closing down, running several several days. An indoor seating area will open up in 2001.

The former GE building, located at 31st and Walnut streets, will open as an apartment building in 2001.

years in the making, the new center of campus life will open by late summer

When the Trustees determined that the University could not afford to build an entire facility, a four-story project and an additional ground floor would cost $95 million, costs that would be deferred until 1995. Thus Rodin and Chodorow met with the Board of Trustees to create a new student union. The Trustees were satisfied with the design and with the budget, and the project was approved. The three major design points of the Trustees were finalized: the student union would be disassembled for $1 million, the ground floor of the Student Union would be complete by late 1999, and the Student Union would open by late summer.

"The road to Perelman Quad has been windy at best," said Judith Rodin, University President. Construction on the project finally began in 1990 from Perelman, a 1965 graduate of Wharton's undergraduate program. Rodin was able to bring the Revlon Center plans to a new student union. The project would be completed by the end of 1999, and the Student Union would be complete by the end of 1999.

The new Student Union would be housed in a new facility. The old Student Union was "a long time for a big project," said Judith Rodin. And University Trustee David Silfen, who served on the Student Union Committee, said it was "a little bit of a delay," but the new Student Union would be complete by the end of 1999.

The Student Union will be complete by the end of 1999. The new Student Union will be a new facility located in the nation's oldest campus, and the Student Union will be complete by the end of 1999. The new Student Union will be complete by the end of 1999.

WHITE DOG CAFE COOKBOOK

H. Hoops seniors to try for pros

By Rick Maggerty

Four years have passed since Michael Jordan and Leon Langel removed their Penn basketball helmets to the换成the waterfall. Neither of them, however, is looking to end his playing days just yet. Jordan and Langel are both still on the court, each working hard to prove that they are right to stay.

Michael Jordan

Penn senior Michael Jordan has spent the past few seasons as a part of the Ivy League's top three teams. He has been a valuable contributor to the team and has played a key role in their success.

On the court, Jordan is known for his quickness and agility. He has been a force on both ends of the court, with his ability to get to the basket and his tenacity on defense. He has been a leader on the team, both on and off the court.

Off the court, Jordan is a hard worker. He has put in the time and effort to improve his skills and has been a positive influence on his teammates. He has been a role model and has set a good example for others to follow.

Michael Jordan's legacy at Penn will be one of dedication and hard work. He has given everything he has to the team, and his contributions will not be forgotten.

Leon Langel

Leon Langel is another senior who has dedicated himself to the team. He has been a consistent presence on the court and has been a strong leader for the team.

On the court, Langel is known for his strong work ethic and his ability to get to the basket. He has been a reliable option for the team and has been a key player in their success.

Off the court, Langel is a hard worker. He has put in the time and effort to improve his skills and has been a positive influence on his teammates. He has been a role model and has set a good example for others to follow.

Hoops recruits three help defend Ivy crown

By John Shoop

Penn assistant coach Tony Tenisci is trying to make sure that the Red and Blue are ready for the season. He is working hard to build a team that can compete in the Ivy League.

The team is still young, but the coaches are working hard to get the best out of their players. They are working hard to develop a team that can compete in the Ivy League.

KIND MALLMOS

About four weeks ago, I was seated in New York on a corner table, enjoying a hard-earned coffee that was served in a giant martini glass. As I finished my coffee and began to leave, a hand gently tapped me on the shoulder. I turned around to see a smiling man wearing a black suit and white shirt. He introduced himself as a friend of a friend and asked if I would like to attend an event at Internet giant Microsoft.

I was a little taken aback by the sudden offer. Microsoft is one of the world's largest technology companies, known for its software products and services. I had heard of the company's products and services, but I had never considered attending an event there. I thought to myself, why not give it a try? After all, it might be a good opportunity to learn more about Microsoft and its products.

The event was a conference held at Microsoft's headquarters in Redmond, Washington. The conference was attended by hundreds of people, including executives, developers, and journalists. The attendees were all excited to be there, and the atmosphere was electric.

During the conference, I had the opportunity to meet and talk with several interesting people. I spoke with a Microsoft executive who had worked at the company for over 20 years, and I was impressed by his knowledge and experience.

I also had the chance to meet a group of Microsoft developers who were working on a new project. They were passionate about their work and eager to share their insights with others.

Overall, the experience was rewarding, and I learned a lot about Microsoft and its products. I am grateful for the opportunity to attend the conference and meet such interesting people. It was a truly memorable event.

In Higson

...the past four years, they have competed, struggled and succeeded. For some, the rewards were great, All-Ivy and All-American honors, as well as numerous championships, came their way, for others, injuries and disappointment were all too frequent
...the field with our teammates, we have put into our respective sports. As one of the final games came to cheer us on, there was a huge support against Harvard and all the stories here at Penn have been on our minds. We remember coach Baker that afternoon we beat Dartmouth for far our program had come. Or there was a few lines from one of our favorite quotes is how we would best describe our team: "Some people's feet never leave the ground. Some of us soar."
...to being part of a team and essentially a Penn student, but to commit the difficulty of just being a student-athlete are without a doubt the most cherished of those memories will deal with my experiences as a Penn wrestler. The friends I have made and the challenges that I tried to meet will, in my mind, define my Penn experience for me. That's a scene I'll never forget.

Matt Langel and Michael Jordan

...we knew each other a distance. We had played against each other as teammates in high school and in the summers at Sonny Hill. We both knew the other was being recruited, along with center Geoff Owens. We both believed we could help form a nucleus that would keep Penn stop the Ivy League. We both watched Penn lose the tiebreaker game to Princeton and separately vowed to help change things.
...of memories from Penn with me, my most memorable moments will deal with my experiences as a Penn wrestler. The friends I have made and the challenges that I tried to meet will, in my mind, define my Penn experience for me. That's a scene I'll never forget.

Andrea Callaghan

...the Penn women's soccer team has been one of the most exciting teams I have ever been a part of. Some of our most cherished memories here at Penn have been on the field with our teammates and friends. I will never forget that night as I stood on the field against Jull in our 13th NCAA appearance in Penn women's soccer history. We remember those times fondly as we step onto the field with our teammates and friends. We almost assume that is how we would best describe our team: "Some people's feet never leave the ground. Some of us soar."
...I was able to grow so much with mentally and physically. I cannot picture my Penn experience without athleticism and I am very happy to have been a part of two wonderful teams.

Women's Soccer

...I will always remember coach Baker pulling us aside after the game and crying as he congratulated us on the biggest win of our careers, so far.
...some people's feet never leave the ground. Some of us soar.

Women's Lacrosse and Field Hockey

...with all the academic work we have done, everyone agreed that it was a great experience without athletics and am very grateful to have been a part of this wonderful team.

Women's Soccer

...I would not have gotten through these difficult times. I feel that participating in Penn athletics has helped me grow so much mentally and physically. I cannot picture my Penn experience without athleticism and I am very happy to have been a part of two wonderful teams.

Field Hockey

...When I was asked to write about my experience at Penn, I tried to think what my life would have been like without field hockey. The truth is I can't imagine it at all. Anyone who has ever played on a team understands the long bus trips, long practices and the conditioning sessions with coach Wagner in your case. But they will also know the feeling of success, the accomplishment, and disappointment of losing. It will always be my one of my experiences in the past four years, and I would like to think my experiences at Penn have made me a better person and will follow me throughout my life.

Leah Bills

...I wish them the best in the future. I am sure that my teammates were out on the field, making sure they got the ball for me. That's a scene I'll never forget.

Football looks to restock linemen

By Jesse Specter

One year removed from the glory of throwing Franklin Field's west goalpost into the Holyoke River in celebration of an Ivy League championship, the Penn football team will try to close the gap back to the top of the Ivy.

The path back to the top of the An cient Eight will not be an easy one, and Penn coach Al Bagnoli will have to hope that his efforts in recruiting and Penn's defense will not be easy to replace.

"We get hit pretty extensively by grad tees," Bagnoli said. "On offense, we have the using problem with the line." Penn has no such problems away from the line.

"You really look at the strength of our team, it's in the skill positions," Bagnoli said. "So that was our No. 1 priority." To that end, two two year road grades stand out in the offensive line. One is Chris Clark, a 6'2", 285-pound lineman from Temecula, Calif, who was named the league's Most valuable Player.

Another offensive lineman projected for this year is Chris McGrady, hailing from Shady Spring, W Va., tips the scales at 280 pounds. McGrady was first team All-Ivy while at Penn. He was also captain of the Quakers.
