Traber steps down as Health System CEO

After just five months as Health System chief, Peter Traber accepted a top position with a pharmaceutical company.

The move checked doctors at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania and administrators at College Hall, who said Traber's decision to step down caught them almost completely by surprise.

"Peter had expressed great enthusiasm and a deep commitment to the Health System," said Stanley Goldfarb, who succeeded Traber as the outgoing chair of the School of Medicine. "But in the end I think he decided that this was really his lead. I have to take what's been said at face value."

Traber was appointed to succeed longtime Health System chief executive and Medical School Dean William Keller in February after a search that included such Philadelphia board members as Robert Herum, chairman of AstraZeneca and former chief executive of the University's Hitchcock Hospital System.

He remained interim dean of the Medical School and chief executive of the Medical School because the University re-appointment to his position before accepting the job. The University said the appointment does not affect other work he was doing in the School of Medicine.

"I'm very disappointed," said Peter Heyman, the outgoing chair of the Medical School, who called Traber's decision to step down "a head-scratcher."

In a statement yesterday, Traber said he was "humbled and inspired" by the support he received from the University community and that he had "chosen the path that feels most right for me." The one-year-old Health System's financial recovery plan, which Traber helped launch, is expected to demonstrate in its first year.

"Traber steps down as Health System CEO

The move shocked doctors at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania, where he had served as chief executive since February.

"It's a big change," said Robert A. M. Kligman, chief of dermatology at the hospital, where Traber had been a professor since 1979.

"It's a difficult time to leave," said Kligman, who is also chairman of the hospital's board of trustees.

"I don't think it makes a lot of sense," he said. "It's a difficult time for Traber to leave."
Leaving so soon?

University officials should work quickly to find a replacement Peter Traber

...Sometimes it's just more fun to be a kid. When I was a baby, I was always either crying or playing hide-and-seek, and I was never able to hold down the baby clothes for more than a few minutes. For my parents, it was always a constant battle to keep me entertained. Chuck and Buck are exactly the same way. They are a perfect match for each other, and their bond is unbreakable. They move in the same social circles, play the same sports, and even have the same style of dress. They are the perfect pair, and they enjoy spending time together. But when it comes to their individual interests, they are very different. Chuck loves to read books and learn about new things, while Buck prefers to spend time outside or playing video games.

JONATHAN DODGE

Some people might say that Chuck and Buck are a perfect match. They are both happy-go-lucky types who love to have fun and enjoy the simple things in life. But others might argue that they are too similar and lack the balance that is necessary for a healthy relationship. Whatever the case may be, it's clear that Chuck and Buck are deeply rooted in each other's lives and will continue to support each other through thick and thin.

They were the very best of friends

Creepy and bizarre, yet captivating, Chuck & Buck explores where friendship and homosocietal meet.

RACHEL RYAN

I long for the days when movies about the kids were the kids. When nothing else mattered and you never thought you would actually make it back to the theater the day after Christmas. Chuck & Buck, a wittily watchable slice of obsession, examines the boundaries between childhood and adulthood. The film draws its tone from the names of its main characters, Maty and Nikki, childhood buddies who, after a breakup, meet again in the more adult Chapter 2.

Chuck (Mike White) has spent his life striving for the unattainable, often to the point of losing himself. Buck (Chris Weitz) is a successful screenwriter in addition to being the more adult character. But it is Buck that Chuck ushers away from his life of delusion and wantonness. Whether they are in bed, or the more adult Chuck Chapter 2: the two have an undeniable chemistry.

Chuck recognizes that the friendship, which he wants to turn into something more, is a tryst between childhood and adulthood. He wants to enjoy the whole album. But even the most dedicated fan only needs to find out a few more similar things before the two can be completely separate.

Buck's understanding of Chuck, never having been able to make sense of his friend, and so he follows his new friend B.V. until he knows the two can be spin in different directions.

Chuck is the stuff of which he says, with the perfect pitch, "I don't want to be John Travolta when you hit the floor..." The song is sung by George Dubya sightings at this lefty lounge. The point is that Chuck is the child he once was with his polished adult persona, for he learns that the two can't always be completely separate.

Despite the fact that the two men meet in the more adulthood, it is in the world of the children that they combine their different influences into something new. Buck brings to the friendship the lighthearted, high-humored, introspective aspects of the film, while Chuck brings in the more adult elements, the dark, truly horrific elements of the story.

Producers Brian Setzler and Ted Rueter, who act as the producers of the film, echo the idea that the two characters are similar and have the same story to tell. The two characters come together in the world of the children, where they are able to explore and express their own unique identities.

The film's story is simple but profound. It is the story of two characters from different worlds who come together and find something new in each other. It is a story of growth and change, of understanding and acceptance. It is a story of friendship and love.

The film's score is also a significant aspect of its success. The music is written by Morcheeba, a band who has been praised for their ability to blend different styles and create something unique. Their music is perfect for the film, complementing the characters' journeys and adding depth to the story.

The film's success is a testament to the power of friendship and the importance of understanding and acceptance. It is a story that is relevant to all ages and to all who have experienced the challenges of growing up and finding their own identity.

In conclusion, Chuck & Buck is a film that is both entertaining and thought-provoking. It is a story of friendship, of love, and of the power of understanding and acceptance. It is a film that will be enjoyed by audiences of all ages and will leave them with a sense of appreciating the importance of these themes in our lives.
