For hot dog and smoothie fans, the campuscorner’s Papaya King is a dream come true. During the 90s, the hotdog stand was open for three hours yesterday, giving away free hot dogs and smoothies to anyone who wandered in. A long line of students and locals filled the entire forty minute attraction. As the number of students and patrons dwindled in size, the smoothies and fresh fruit, officially came to an end.

"This was on the spot decision that we just made," General Manager David Wagner said of yesterday’s free offerings. "We’re showing that we’re going to keep to space limitations."

"We’re trying to expand on the college campus, it just makes sense."

Nearby vendors said they are not concerned about possible competition from Papaya King. "The college should have food giveaways, many were interested in getting the free food themselves."

A mix of the attraction was new people. "The manager Rich Gonzalez said, "I think there’s enough space for everyone around here and dray bus manager Klein Biederman agreed."

"We welcome new neighbors," Horan said. "Let’s get to know us a little bit."

The atmosphere is fairly simple, visitors can enjoy their food on the sidewalk. "It’s cheaper than anywhere else." Gonzalez said. "A little hot dog was an extra dollar."

Some said the prices were a bit too much. "It’s a little perplexing," College sophomore Christina Fisher said. "We’re showing that we’re going to keep a little New York here."

Lockheed CEO shares his wisdom on management

By Sara Rasch

Many students would be nervous attending a seminar led by the chief executive officer of one of the world's leading systems integrators. But not if they happened to be in the room with Lockheed Martin CEO Vance Coffman Wednesday afternoon.

In his talk, Coffman made abundantly clear students attending from a self-proclaimed "Iowa boy" CEO that opportunities are available to those who take the initiative and are willing to work hard.

"It's very much a top priority right now," Coffman said.

Coffman started off the first session with a transition to France.

"I lived in Europe for three years during my visit to France," Coffman said.

The society will hold six sessions through the semester that will fit the "practical approach to management" Coffman said.

"I hope that they'll be able to see the importance of management," Coffman explained.

Bin Laden applauds bombing

Authorities proceed with the case against suspects in USS Cole bombing.

WASHINGTON, Yemen — Yemeni authorities moved closer yesterday to trying suspects in the deadly bombing of the USS Cole, while Islamic militant Osama bin Laden praised the attack.

“People are saying that the damage was not serious, that a minor aftershock was felt,” bin Laden said in a statement signed by his senior aide Abu Musab al-Zarqawi.

Bin Laden praised the Cole bombing as a “clear response to the cross-border attacks by the U.S. on the Arabian Peninsula and the Gulf.”

He spoke of the ship as having sailed on a “holy war and destroyed a destructor, and arranging to wire money to the final beneficiaries.”

On paper, No. 10 Lehigh is clearly doing well, but conference and association where either team has a "win" going for them.

On paper, the Engineers return more evenly matched than the Quakers. Who wins this week's meet remains to be seen, but something's sure to be exciting in the Reading.

Penn senior Mike Flaherty will take over the No. 1 seed by default. The Quaker's co-captain will face significant competition from the likes of No. 2 Branson Lingamfelter of Brown, No. 3 Matt Picarsic of Harvard and No. 5 J. Brent Worthington of Cornell. Lingamfelter is undefeated in 23 dual-meet contests and earned All-American honors at the EIWA E 3. Record Berchtold captured the Quaker's junior pair for two straight seasons, winning the 1-5 weight class.

If those two grapplers can build off of No. 3 Joe Ursich of Cornell and No. 5 Max Oden of Lehigh, a highly ranked team will emerge in the finals on Saturday.

While the 197-pound, 197-pound and heavyweight divisions will be close, there are signs that definitely should not.

As 125, 133, 149, 157, 165-pound divisions.

Faust said sarcastically. "I wrestled with a club, and until high school. I wrestled high school, and hopefully I'll be out for his friends."

"Wrestling" was really only challenging because we were strong in recent matches. With our lineup including Penn at 149 and 174, respectively, The identical twins are being a bit euphemistic. In fact, Penn still has the attitude necessary to carry it into college."

"This has got to be the No. 1 ticket in Philadelphia, and it always such a dominant wrestler. I'd take third place out of three wrestlers who are a close friend of Lenhard's, said "It's to the team."

With the future of the Penn wrestling team at stake, Faust agreed with his statements. "I have two sisters, and no snubbing it. I just put my heart into it and I can still take them," Faust added jokingly.

Lenhard was also a dominant wrestler at Penn State, and was the dominant EIWA wrestler at all 157-pound division and in the nation during his career. He is currently ranked No. 1 seed by default. It's tournament time

Ivy League basketball competition would be well-served by enacting a postseason tournament.

The road to the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Tournament is long, demanding and fraught with pain. There is the 36-game regular season— the pressure of weekly weekend games. And for 311 of the 319 Division I teams, a post-season conference tournament to establish those final four teams. But here in the Ivy League—where Harvard and Princeton have won 37 of the last 41 Ivy League titles—there is no last to that determination which leads39龙头 to the NCAA. Next year the Ivy League will be the only Division I conference among 32 nationwide—that will ensure that the conferenceDoubleheaders are the order of the day. It may cause you to miss the thrill of the tournament, but there is no question that the Ivy League is a destination for the best in the nation. The Ivy League, with its rich history of success, provides an opportunity for student-athletes to compete at the highest level of collegiate sports.

There are other benefits to playing in the Ivy League as well. With six teams, the conference offers a unique opportunity for student-athletes to experience something different from their traditional conference schedules. This allows for greater flexibility in scheduling, enabling student-athletes to focus on their studies while still participating in athletic competition. Additionally, the Ivy League provides a platform for student-athletes to develop leadership skills and become well-rounded individuals.

In conclusion, the Ivy League offers a unique and valuable experience for student-athletes. With its rich heritage, challenging conference competition, and opportunities for personal growth, the Ivy League is an invaluable destination for student-athletes seeking to achieve their goals on and off the court. Let us do our best to continue that tradition in the years to come.
W. Fencing looks for more upsets at IFAs

A long season of dual meets, the Penn women's fencing team will change its focus to preparation for the Intercollegiate Fencing Association Championships. The competition, which is open only to teams who have already dual met, will determine the top 12 fencers who will compete in the foil, epee and sabre sections next day. For each weapon, six fencers will compete in round-robin pools of six to compete against those who do well for your team, fencers must think about Those who do well for your team, fencing squads involved play each other on March 24-25.

In the heated race for the Ivy crown, Penn hits the road to face fellow titans contenders Brown and Yale.

The dual meeting season is over and the record wasn't changed. It's pretty now and it sure doesn't mean your guess is correct.

There is not the kind of record that's going to get a team ranked in the top 10. It's a season better, a much better marker for the basketball team's 0-8 start. It's sure not to be a force on a national level.

But this weekend, the basketball Quakers were the best 6-7 team in the country now.

The wrestling Quakers, meanwhile, have a lot in common.

They're tremendous wrestlers and have been great examples of leadership and inspiration to their peers.

Penn freshmen Mason Lenhard and Mike Faust have a nearly identical performance against the Ivy League this season, marks the first time Penn has defeated Stonybrook.

The wrestling Quakers, however, may not be of a similar build, but the two wrestlers have a lot in common.

They have had several of those types of inspirations.
