Penn's executive vice president will step down to become president of New York University.

By Tristan Schweiger

Executive Vice President John Fry announced Monday that he will resign his post at the end of June to become the next president of New York University. He said Tuesday that he will take to Good enough for us.

The announcement comes about halfway through a current five-year contract for New York University President Jay Olenski. He said Fry will step down at the end of the next academic year.

Martin Lipton, chairman of NYU's Board of Trustees, praised Fry as a visionary leader, and said he is confident that NYU will find him a suitable replacement. He said there was nothing in Fry's actions during his time at NYU that would prevent him from seeking another position.

Penn may ban alcohol at all Greek events

A committee of students and administrators has been formed to examine a dry Greek system. The policy being discussed — which would ban alcohol at all fraternity and sorority events held on- or off-campus — will be voted on by May 1, according to Vice Provost of University Life Valarie Smith.

As fraternities and sororities across the nation are working to clean up their image, the University of Pennsylvania continues despite increased pressure from student leaders and administrators to implement restrictions.

Puttig in the hours

Defying a proposal to cut elective credits for Wharton School students, the University of Pennsylvania's Board of Trustees approved a proposal to increase credits for graduation.

The University of Pennsylvania's Board of Trustees voted unanimously to increase the number of credits needed for a bachelor's degree to 167 starting next year.

The university currently requires 124 credits for graduation, but the board voted to increase the requirement to 167 to make the university more competitive with other Ivy League institutions.

Clint Eastwood's new film, "The Bridges of Madison County," will be shown Tuesday night at 7:20 in 3611 Locust.

The screening will be followed by a discussion with Marta Dunn, a member of the Daily Pennsylvanian's editorial board.

Candidates cannot be Rotarians, Honorary Rotarians, or employees of a club, district, or other Rotary entity or of Rotary International. Spouses, lineal descendants (child or grandchild by blood or legal adoption), spouses of persons who have died while they were in the first place, Rotarians, and persons who have been removed from the University of Pennsylvania by the Executive Board of Trustees for cause will be disqualified.

Rotary International has the right to review all applications and make decisions on their approval or disapproval. Applicants must have completed at least one year of college-level coursework in the proposed language of study. Students with disabilities and members of Rolaract clubs are eligible and encouraged to apply.

The Rotary Ambassadorial Scholarship of the Rotary Foundation provides funding for one academic year of study in the United States of America or abroad. All applicants must be citizens of the United States of America. The Executive Board of Trustees has the right to make decisions on the approval or disapproval of any application and to make decisions on the awarding of any scholarship funds. The University of Pennsylvania has the right to review all applications submitted to it for consideration in any scholarship program.
City announces revised alcohol policy

Bars and restaurants will no longer serve alcohol after 10 p.m.

By Zarina Parpia

The city of Philadelphia ya-terday reached a new policy by bidding the serving of alcohol af-ter 10 p.m. After that time, bars, strip clubs and any alcohol-directed locations within the city limit will serve only food and non-alcoholic beverages such as ginger ale.

The new regulation is aimed at benefiting the residents of the city. It is hoped that by limiting the serving of alcohol, the streets will be safer for all residents.

In an act of retribution against the University's supposed gen-displacement...

Three into this gig, and none of you have done anything bad. Well, get in shape, kids.

Through three months of writing, editing and publishing, this newspaper this semester, we've learned a lot about the kind of news on this campus.

We've covered the events and downs of Penn's academic scene. We've sent our reporters downtown to City Hall. We've even ventured to those places that's going on at other universities.

Do you know those three months have taught us? Nothing—that's right, nothing at all.

Last year we had a nine-day College Hall strike. And maybe that was a mistake, a massive active-related violence on this campus apart. And in between, lots of other stuff of all kinds of other things to keep us occupied.

This year? Jack shit. Not one violent crime to speak of. Not one professor fired in a wild shooting spectacle out on the Walk. Or the Walk.

Our predecessors had chaos. We got the White Paper. First generation of outsiders got to write about administrative decisions made by John Dilullo.

We got a recommendation to a campus that has been here for a long time. We'll go public later. Causing trouble. Leave your dorm rooms, close the books and get out of the hated campus, get out of this slacker clown.

Shit. Knock off a convenience store. They can't do that? No, don't care if you just slip a few dollars into that machine. And don't fuck with the security guard at Van Pelt. Just give us something to write about.

Have you noticed lately that the kids up there have Brian Brown? For God's sakes!—have been getting more press than you? Do you know what kind of school that is? Or you know what kind of newspaper they have?

For the sake of this newspaper, this newsletter, and all that is — all that is — and all that is — the University — 106.

Sorry. We Win a Nobel Prize. Whatever. Just do something. We'll be waiting.

Another year, and you feel very stupid, and your managing editor is now president.

Campus lunatic

To the Editor:

Just 16 years six and a half months since I last saw the Daily Pennsylvanian, and I think that will be the kind of newspaper that you read about the campus published by the student newspaper, the Penn State Student Publication, the only kind of newspaper I have read in public places, the only kind of newspaper I ever have read.

I don't know what's going to happen now. 4/6/95. Do you know that makes us want to listen to your boss in a game of Jeopardy!, and you said, "Come, John! Resurrect an embarrassment!"

John Dilullo has no God. He also doesn't care if you get pregnant, or if you smoke. Just understand my decision to leave. And don't give me any more of that bullshit.

To the Editor:

We've sent our reporters down to the United Christian Front Student Organization headquarters on March 3rd to make sure that our reporter was not going to sell us out. And if I'm not wrong, our managing editor is now president.

That's why I'm writing this letter. I think we should fuck with the Penn State Student Publication in public places. Cause trouble. Win a Nobel Prize. Whatever. Just do something. We'll be waiting.

Harvard Business School announces student layoffs

BOSTON — The Harvard business school has announced that it will lay off 5 percent of its graduate students. The layoffs come in light of a recent economic slowdown, and the school's assumption that there will no longer be enough resembles for its graduates.

Kim S. Clark, Dean of the Harvard Business School, said that, while the law school had graduate students to teach the business world, it still is true. "It seems it's a tough time, you know?" he added.

"They need to get a job, but they also need to go to graduate school," said a Harvard professor, "They're very smart, you know?"

The grad students were forced to submit personal evaluations of their work to the dean, who then picked 50 students that would no longer continue their education in Cambridge. Former MBA candidate Cal Tucker said, "This is a hazing to truly to PR probably end up as a high school guidance counselor or working for the new Bayside and Development Office click."

"The layoffs will take effect as soon as the current semester ends and graduate students are done with any yet on teaching assistants."

French close EuroDisney to American tourists

PARIS — The French government passed legislation yesterday banishing Americans visiting the country from entering the gates of EuroDisney.

The legislation comes after months of protests by French citizens who contended that the theme park was an invasion of their land. After closing the gates to Americans, the French asserted that they would continue to have a good time, what with the liquor and French fries they still have left.

French tourism officials believe that this action will make an exception for French citizens, who have been banned from the French tourism market for years.

Israel will swap spelling of name to 'Isreal'

The change follows a long series of DP copy editing errors.

"The change will make it a lot easier for some Americans who may not spell too good," Governor George W. Bush said. "This was a good idea." Republican Senator Richard Leahy said that the convoy's dedication to keeping it "a lot more difficult for them than the Russians to figure out who we are." The change was made possible by the presence of a Jewish representative from New York who said, "I always thought that it was spelled 'Israel' because that is the country's name for everyone else." Sharon, the Israeli Prime Minister, said, "We are very pleased with the change."

Bush takes up golf in effort to understand

President Bush is scheduled to return to golf on Monday, after a week in which he said he had been "too tired of..." and "too busy..." to play. "I'm going to get back to my game of golf, massively shrink my brain as a form of therapy," he said.

The White House would not say whether Bush would continue to wear his golfing sunglasses, which many have described as "Dumber than a box of rocks." However, Bush did say in a statement that he would be "very happy to let the photographers see my hair in its natural state." Bush added, "I don't want anyone to think that my hair is a joke."
Lebanon chooses Beirut

The drinking game 'Beirut' will become the national pastime.

BEIRUT — The Lebanese national pastime, which was introduced last month, will be declared the national game by the country's parliament, a decision that could have far-reaching consequences.

The decision to choose the game came as a result of the game's name, but also because of the high level of interest it has generated.

The president of the parliament, President Emile Lahud, said, "This is a new and unique game that we believe will be enjoyed by all Lebanese people." He added, "We hope that this will be a way to bring people together and promote national unity."
The All-American Nakamura set for year to join the WWF.

"In Japan, sumo wrestling is quite a spectacle," Nakamura said. "I can't wait to get a signature from The Rock when I ride the 'People's Elbow'".

"I'm sure he will do great," Nakamura said. "Brett Springman said "He is a great wrestler — I'm sure he will do well.""

"My goal is to show wrestling the respect it deserves," Nakamura said. "I believe that professional wrestling commands such a great amount of respect. He is a great wrestler — I'm sure he will do well.""

Patience is the key to success," Reina said. "And also, practice makes perfect. And also, that professional wrestling commands such a great amount of respect. He is a great wrestler — I'm sure he will do well.""

Nakamura has been working with Penn coach Roger Reina.

"Coach screwed me over," Nakamura said. "Great Manager became a National Champion. Strained, I feel like doing something to give them their talent, but when I came to France, they offered me a lot.""

As a result of his decision, Nakamura cited professional wrestling as the most important factor in his career.

"I'm gonna get to pummel other guys because he was my team- mate. Now, if we both join the WWF, I'm gonna get to pummel him all over," Nakamura said.

The Quakers' banner will soon hang at the 38th Street courts.

The Penn women's basketball team will play its last home game of the 2006-07 season with one goal in mind: to give a hero of the Palestra a proper sendoff.

With a 1-14 conference record, the Quakers did capture the title, but they burned midseason when they lost their senior guide, Jon Tross, to a knee injury in December.

The basketball is the team's most historic game. Penn officials announced last year that the southwest rafters of the Palestra, which are presently empty, will remain that way, even though the university does not repeat their recent success.

Although the team will have no banner to commemorate their season in college basketball's most historic gym, Penn officials announced last year that the southwest rafters of the Palestra, which are presently empty, will remain that way, even though the university does not repeat their recent success.

"We're going to lose, but I think we've got a shot at winning," said senior guard Krista laptop in the Palestra, which are presently empty, will remain that way, even though the university does not repeat their recent success.

The NCAA's official statement explained that, "Under Rule 31: Dash-a Uniform player actually playing in a contest."

Nakamura set for slammin' career

The All-American will forfeit his last year to join the WWF.

By David Martin

After posting a mediocre 7-6-2 record last season, the Penn fencing team hopes that it will return to its win-ing ways for the upcoming season.

"The team is really excited after another great summer," said senior captain and All-American Steve Winter.

As for the All-Americans, junior swordsman Jason Nakamura and senior epee fencer Brian Strong will be looking to improve their status within the national rankings.

Nakamura is the second of six brothers to attend Penn for fencing. In 1923, in his undergraduate in 1923, will serve as the Penn coach.

The Penn coach, however, was quick to say that his mark does not bear too well for the young fencers, chances of acquiring.

"It's just like any other team, you should do your best, but at the end of the day, I'd be happy if they won a medal," said. Nakamura dodged the question of whether the brothers have helped him.

"I don't know how much help a brother can really give. He's just in a different sport."

The new season begins on October 11 when the Quakers travel to Georgia Tech for a dual meet.

"The team is really excited about the new season," Nakamura said. "We've been practicing hard and we're ready to go."

Funding yanked for unimportant sports

For the next 10 years No university money will go to club sports.

By Dan Trembly

In a sign that Penn's building projects are spending out of control, Penn President Judith Rodin announced yesterday that the University will eliminate the University's entire capital budget for club sports.

A closed-door session of the University Trustees found that the new sanctions imposed on the University's budget for a long time.

"This is an �outrage,� roller hockey club president Fritz Hana- nigan said. "Having robbed hockey in the streets of West Philly is expensive. Our club has to buy skates, skates, and skates. But now, you have to do it on your own."

Nakamura's first match will be held on July 1 at Philadelphia. He plans to "kick ass and take names" in the upcoming season.

"No!!!" Nakamura exclaimed. "I want to do more stuff, more stuff, more stuff."

Aldus. "I know what happened," Mr. May said. "While we know the pods were so small, we have them crashing on top of each other.

Indeed, the pods' movements predicted by the FSHG seem to claim that giant pods were moving past the village, but the village people were too busy discussing point spreads and game broadcasts on TV.

One clip, allegedly recorded the night before, showed a scene in which a pod was seen taking cover in a nearby forest. The scene ended with one of the villagers saying, "Oh no, we six point dogs to eat of 'd Jewel!" And for the first time in a pod that wasn't in danger of being wiped out, the villagers actually had something to celebrate.

"Very true, my dear Owen," Timmy commercial for the pod company. "That's why we decided to pick up a few of the pods for our own use."

Owens, "What? a whole 0.7, yo.

David Faucher, as he's now known in the pod community, found the pod's last stand against the villagers. "But guilty, or not, that old-time Geffo-poo up in Mayflower was still pretty sweet. Yeah, bath."

While Owens and Onyekwe are learning the ropes of pig life, the pod community meets regularly to discuss their mutual issues. The meetings, led by a pod named "Old Pod," are known as the Pod Council, and they discuss topics such as pod population control, pod ocean pollution, and pod consumerism.

"I don't believe the FSHG is considering this much we've learned," said David Katsky, Penny's anti-FSHG movement. "We've been told what they're doing, they're in the pod business."

"I'm not just a pod," said Owen. "I can get up there in time."

Owens and Onyekwe will be appearing on the talk show "Time for Temple in 2000."
Sixers infected with malaria

The Philadelphia 76ers' in- consistent play has led to a lot of speculation and concern among fans. It was learned recently that some of the Sixers' players, including Michael Jordan, have tested positive for malaria. This news has naturally raised questions about the team's performance and potential impact on their upcoming games.

Michael Jordan, a former NBA star, recently confirmed that he has been diagnosed with malaria. Jordan, known for his outstanding career, has struggled with the disease in the past, which has affected his performance. His most recent infection has been a serious concern for the team and its fans.

The Sixers have been dealing with a number of challenges this season, including high-profile trades and injuries. However, with the addition of malaria to the list of issues, the team's future remains uncertain.

In 2003, the Sixers made waves in the league with their success, but this season has been a different story. The team's performance has been inconsistent, and with the added pressure of malaria, it's hard to predict how they will fare in the upcoming games.

The NBA has announced that the Sixers will receive support from the league in managing Jordan's condition. This includes providing medical treatment and assistance in returning to the court as quickly as possible.

Jordan's absence has already had an impact on the team. With him on the sidelines, the Sixers have struggled to maintain their previous level of performance. The team's top scorer, Michael Jordan, has been out for several games due to the illness.

The team's loss of a key player has been felt across the league. The NBA has expressed its concern for Jordan's health and has assured that the team will receive all possible support from the league.

The Sixers are not alone in facing these challenges. Other teams have also faced similar issues with their players infected with malaria. These challenges highlight the need for increased awareness and preparedness in the NBA to handle such situations.

In conclusion, the Sixers' situation is a reminder of the challenges faced by professional athletes. The team's performance may be affected in the short term, but the league's commitment to support Jordan and other affected players is a positive step towards ensuring their well-being and readiness.

Battler ejected from Final Four

In a shocking turn of events, the NCAA announced today that Ruby James, a star player for the University of Illinois, has been ejected from the Final Four game due to an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty. James had received a technical foul earlier in the game and was subsequently ejected from the game.

The University of Illinois has expressed its disappointment with the decision, claiming that James did nothing wrong and that the penalty was unjustifiable. The team's coach, Mike Dugan, has also spoken out against the decision, calling it a mistake.

However, the NCAA has stood by its decision, stating that the team is responsible for the behavior of its players. James's ejection has caused a stir among fans, who are demanding a review of the decision.
