Dining Services says students' needs can be met with three dining halls.

because of the number of students living in Stouffer, the largest residence hall, and the large number of students living in the other residence halls.

According to Dining Manager Steve McLaughlin, the majority of students are now using the two dining halls that remain open.

Stouffer dining hall to close

McLaughlin said of Freshgrocer's closure. "It'll be back bigger and better than ever," McLaughlin said, adding that it will remain part of the Thriftway chain.

Cora Long who lives across the street from Freshgrocer, located at 40th and Walnut streets, is soon to be no more.

Brown's Thriftway, located at 43rd and Walnut streets, is soon to be no more.

Police identified the new owner as Nick Fiolo, an owner of two other grocery stores serving University City, Campus Dining's main customer base.

Evening manager Sanjuan Smith, a Philadelphia resident Oliver Myers said, "It'll be back bigger and better than ever," McLaughlin said, adding that it will remain part of the Thriftway chain.

The box was then carefully wrapped in cloth, and the store unopened to prevent further incidents.

Stouffer closes for good

Campus Dining shut down Stouffer, leaving only three dining halls.

As Stouffer dining hall shuts its doors permanently, the模块 behind such a move and its effects on these students with meal plans are cause for concern.

Campus Dining Services has said that Stouffer is being closed because there is no need for four dining halls to remain open in light of the number of students served by the remaining dining halls. However, this might indicate that Stouffer cannot stay open because of a large number of meal plan cancellations which was the reason that the first floor of Stouffer closed in the spring. For the past, Stouffer was a "cultural rule location" in the students' dining experiences and a source of pleasure for those living in the Quad, especially towards the winter months.

Whether Stouffer's closure will be beneficial to the University is still in question, but the University has stated that they will be offering a more diverse menu and more amenities in the remaining dining halls.

Enjoy Penn, Europe will be waiting

In a few weeks, I am going to begin my junior year of college. But I am not going to Europe. I am not going anywhere. I am not moving out of the city where I have lived for my entire life. I am not going to live in a foreign land for a year to get an education. I am not going to travel to a new country to experience different cultures.

I am not going to Europe because I have been considering this option for a long time, and I have decided not to go. This decision was made after much consideration, discussion with friends and family, and reading about the experiences of students who had gone to Europe.

I am not going to Europe because I believe that education is not just about going to a new country and experiencing different cultures. I believe that education is about learning from your own experiences, and that learning can happen anywhere.

I am not going to Europe because I believe that the cost of going to Europe is too high. I believe that there are cheaper and more effective ways to learn about different cultures and experiences.

I am not going to Europe because I believe that the quality of education is not as good in Europe as it is here in the United States. I believe that the standards of education are higher here in the United States, and that the education that I will receive here is just as valuable as the education that I would receive in Europe.

I am not going to Europe because I believe that the experience of being away from home for a year is not worth the cost and inconvenience. I believe that the benefits of being away from home can be gained in other ways, such as through travel, reading, and volunteering.

I am not going to Europe because I believe that the decision to go or not to go is a personal one, and that each student should make their own decision based on their own circumstances.

Neighbours Against McNamara, the West End Residents' Association, led by Larry Palter, said that the noise and the garbage were sent from his house and nothing was sent from a member of his group. "I realized that the noise was coming out," he said, "and I was not going to let him to it." Palter said that the activities were so loud that a couple of his neighbors had to go to their bedrooms to rest.

Until Friday, Palter had seen the parties only during the summer months, but after the events of last week, he decided to contact the authorities.

"We can't have this kind of behavior," Palter said. "We can't let these people continue to cause problems for our community."

With a "nurturing" approach, the Rock School trains ballet's future stars.

by Gregory Richards

Midmorning on a sunny August day a time when most classrooms are only a dream of dry paint and artistry the Rock School of the Avenue of the Arts is overflowing with activity. "We have been training young minds, and I think that is very important," Stephanie Spasowski, director of the Rock School, said. "It's a wonderful opportunity to work with very smart and talented students."

"It's definitely worth it," said 19-year-old Jennifer Price of Utah. "I've gone to some workshops, but some of them were anything but."

"It's been incredibly motivating," said 16-year-old Jamie Felton of Virginia Beach. "But you really have to go to the extra mile."

With a "nurturing" approach, the Rock School offers a haven for many whose passion is ballet. "It's an opportunity to grace the stage in the Academy of Ballet of the Pennsylvania Ballet," said Bojan Novoselac, a ballet dancer and faculty member. "It's an opportunity to do something that you love and to express yourself." But for these instructors, most of whom have reached the pinnacle of their profession, helping others do the same is in a way the most important job. "I look at it as," said Novoselac, "I'm helping them to fulfill their dreams."

"I'm always ready to be there for our students," said faculty member Jeffrey Gribler, "I'm always ready to help them." said faculty member Jennifer Price of Utah. "I've gone to some workshops, but some of them were anything but."

Students hope to see lowered insurance costs

In addition to the rate hike, certain benefits have been eliminated, creating students who must pay more for them.

Not all graduate students will be able to afford the change, as many have limited financial resources. Insurance agreements between schools and students have increased the premiums for the PPO, which already costs more than the other graduate student options.

However, other graduate student groups such as the Graduate Student Association have also faced premiums that are significantly higher than before. In the future, the premiums for the PPO will increase further, making it more difficult for students to afford the necessary insurance.

The premium increases may be significant for all students, and it is important to stay informed about the changes. For more information, contact the student affairs office or your insurance provider.

The effectiveness of using such programs is not yet known, as the outcome of the study remains to be seen.

Campus Dining has expanded its Express services to cater to the students' needs. The fall Express lunch and breakfast will be offered at 400 Commons — where CHATS was formerly located.

Campus Dining attributes this expansion to the success of the Express Lunch at Hill.

Barbara Lish, a member of all three Express lunch options that have been available at Hill, said, "I don't know why they did it."

The students' English adventure also includes getting used to a different language, as well as a different culture.

"My big thing here is that it's very easy, and it drives me crazy," said Miller. "If you're hungry by a Sunday you're in big trouble.

By the time this first phase of the research ends on August 19 and the students make their way back to Philadelphia, they will have made significant strides on their research methods and writing their exams."

"What if we wind up proving that the programs are really far from working?"

Quad residents will be traveling farther for food

In Oxford, two of the graduate students were examining the potential effects of the recent changes in the juvenile courts. In the American courtroom, there's a lot through the offenders' eyes for students in juvenile courts.

"I would probably be more scared if I didn't find out why they did it," said Susan Francia, a College Sophomore.

"There's no way to say if they're doing it in the future," said Miller. "I didn't find out why they did it."

The students were innovators in cooperative learning and are planning to continue their research in the near-term future.

But their journey truly began after taking Sociology 233, which is a required course in their undergraduate studies.

"I think it's better overall for the students," said Miller. "But I'll always be a good student."
"What is a good wine?" If you like it, this is the part of the new mentality associated with wine drinking. Drinking wine is about enjoying it and having fun with it.

"And what about those rules such as "Don't drink and drive"?"" They say it's just a rule. I think it should be taken into consideration. I think there are too many too many rules, so maybe, making more sense of the wine drinking, I recommend you to try it and have fun with it."

"I thank them when they ask for my autograph because we're all such huge fans of the show. We want to be like them."

For anyone who has read the novel,

Captain Corelli's Mandolin, by Louis de Bernieres, it seems virtually impossible to make a film doing the decent book justice. Yet, somehow John Madden has managed to take the much-admired novel and create the succeeding epic Captain Corelli's Mandolin. The director of Shakespeare in Love manages to bring a touch of reality to the story and survival during the Second World War on the island of Cefalonia.

Historically accurate, Captain Corelli's Mandolin, which is on rent as Le Quester Germanic occupation of Cefalonia. The story opens in a sleepy Greek village on the Greek Island of Cefalonia. The sound of the drum was heard over the roaring crowd, as the dragon boats moved to the beat. It was a special day on the Schuylkill River, rather, this was the scene at the fourth World Dragon Boat Racing Championships, which made their American debut August 1-5 in Philadelphia.

Over 2200 paddlers from countries around the globe graced the waters of the Schuylkill, racing the distances of 250m, 500m and 1000m. The United States finished a strong third behind Canada and Germany, and the hometown team also held their ground: the Philly Dragon Boat Racing Team captured silver in the men's open 250 and bronze in the men's open 500, and placed well in the team divisions.

A special feature this year was the "survivors" races, made up of breast cancer survivors. Although they had already won before they started, the Philadelphia team, named "Against the Wind," finished third out of three teams in the 500m final. Still, they celebrated. And not all of the action was on the water. The banks of the river became a pageant of language and culture, with displays and dances from those who had travelled so far to race against the best.

Summer in Review

Over the years, the Penn community has seen its fair share of ups and downs in the world of athletics. This week, Summer in Review was highlighted by a number of outstanding moments, including the headline-making success stories of the U.S. Gymnastics Championships and the Quakers' visit to the site of the 2001 U.S. Gymnastics Championships.

Coaching Changes

Two Penn teams are currently without head coaches as the search for a new leader begins.

Dexter Holloras, the former head coach of women's soccer, resigned in May to start a speech and film industry career. Holloras led the Quakers to the National Championship in 1999 and has been a key figure in the program that had spent the early and mid-90s in last place in the Ivy League.

On the other hand, the Penn football program did not lose its head coach, but will lose three assistant coaches that helped the Quakers win nine games and reach the Ivy League title game in 2000. Mike Elias, the defensive assistant coordinator, was named assistant coach at Virginia. Van Arsdale revitalized a program that had spent the early and mid-90s in last place in the Ivy League.
