On the court, the team worked together to create a series of impressive moves, including aerial passes and precise cuts. The hard work paid off, as the team advanced to the final round of the tournament. The excitement and energy in the gym were infectious, as everyone cheered on the players and celebrated their achievements.

In June 1999, New Jersey Nets Coach Byron Scott and Los Angeles Lakers center Kobe Bryant met for the first time when the City of Philadelphia hosted the city's first "educational housing district bill" hearing. The legislation was intended to create a new form of education in Philadelphia's public schools. The hearing was attended by representatives from Philadelphia's school board, city officials, and community members.

School's capacity will increase with new space

- School from page 1

Penn-Asisted School Planning Coordinator Kaye Knowle said the school will be adding a head start pre-school program, along with second, fifth and sixth grades for the 2003-2004 year. Ultimately, the school will have rooms for students from kindergarten to eighth grade.

"Right now, the movement for expansion is that we have space in all of the grades," Knowle said.

Currently, students at the Penn-Asisted School come from 11 different counties. 41 percent are black, 32 percent are white, 23 percent are Hispanic.

Brodie said that the diversity of the current student body will not be altered as the school's expansion.

The expansion of the Penn-Asisted School — which are partially funded and operated by the University of Pennsylvania — have been in the making since 1996.

The Graduate School of Education Associate Dean Nancy Stearns has guided and helped develop an educational plan for the school. In return, the Penn-Assisted School has enhanced the teaching and curriculum development at the university.

In addition to the expansion that will occur over the summer, administrators and parents are looking toward the new school year as a way to further broaden the sense of community that the Penn-Assisted School tries to promote.

"I think that the thing that is the most wonderful is the sense of community that has developed among the kids," Kreidle said. "They have really embraced each other and are really enjoying the school.

"With the new building opens the scope to having a wider range of students with second, fifth and sixth grades for the 2003-2004 year. They are planning on adding a head start and instrumental program as well.

They have identified the addition of these new resources. We have received our grant, for the 2002-2004 year, we'll be able to add.

Lazerson receives GSE Endowed chair

The professor was awarded the Howard P. and Judith R. Berkowitz Chair in Education.

By Mary Clark-Pearson

After serving as an administrator and educator at the University for seventeen years, Graduate School of Education professor Marvin Lazerson was awarded the Howard P. and Judith R. Berkowitz Chair in Education earlier this week.

Lazerson's accomplishments as interim Provost of the University, followed by his Ph.D in history Harvard University, helped advance the school's reputation.

In his acceptance speech, Lazerson said, “I accept this chair with enormous emotion — more than I can actually put into words.” Lazerson said, “I accept it as a state of grace, a gift of heart, to have a place to live, and still be a better teacher and a leader.”

During his speech, he noted how much the field of education has evolved since he has worked at Penn.

“I started my career as a graduate student at a time when the message to anyone at a selective university was to publish like crazy, write a lot, and not pay much attention to the school of the college you were a member of,” Lazerson said. “I think if we learn how to think of the way to speak outside of your own universe.”

Nevertheless, Lazerson remarked that his initial perception of academia was proven wrong when he arrived at Penn, largely due to the fact that the School of Education was willing to publish like crazy, write a lot, and not pay much attention to the school of the college you were a member of.

In his acceptance speech, Lazerson said that his duties as a professor signify his dedication to teaching, leadership and the pursuit of academic education.

“Mervin is a true leader and planner in the history of American education,” Pomeroy said in her remarks at a reception held in honor of the receipt of the Howard and Judith Berkowitz Chair in Education.

According to GSE Dean Susan H. Fiske, Lazerson's receipt of this honor has been due for a long time.

Expert gives talk on Buddhism

Chogyal Norbu spoke about the principles of his religion last week.

Summer Pennsylvanian

Last Saturday night, Chogyal Namkhai Norbu spoke to a packed audience about Dzogchen, a form of Buddhism.

Over 300 people filled Philadelphia Hall at the International University-sponsored free-events. However, she does yet not know what kind of events they will host. "Hopefully these events will attract music and art," Berkwitz said.

Norbu's talk was relevant not only to practitioners of Buddhism, but also to those just seeking spirituality. "Every time I saw New York and I saw the Towers come down. Listening to his talk helps you stop asking why we suffer," Pillborough said.

"He was incredibly clear, but I don't think you could have gotten him if you didn't have any background in Buddhism," Schoenholt said.

Norbu's talk concluded his Spring 2002 tour of the United States. In total, Norbu gave a series of three public talks — the last of which was the one on Buddhism — and about 20 people filled Hopkinson Hall at the International University-sponsored free-events on Saturday night.

Just over the past couple of weeks, Sobel said that he has seen the number of people involved in the ride shoot up. All of the money from the ride will go to The Kevin Barron Memorial Scholarship Fund, which Sobel runs and for which Sobel was the founding president.

Sobel was a patient at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia when he was 15 years old. He was diagnosed with a rare childhood brain tumor that was taken care of through the work of the doctors and surgeons.

"This ride is an example of what three Philadelphia communities can do to help one another," Sobel said.

Sobel said that at least 50 people are planned to attend the ride, which will start in Strawberry Mansion.

As a graduate of Bartram High, Sobel said that he will have special memories of the ride. "I was particularly touched that my favorite school has had an impact on the entire Philadelphia area," Sobel said.

"The ride is a statement about how we really care about each other, and how we can support each other in our daily lives," Sobel said.

Sobel plans to spend about five hours riding, and that the ride will be a fun and challenging event. "I think it's a great way to raise money for charity," Sobel said. "It's an event that everyone can participate in, and that's why I'm excited about it."
