The Schoenberg Database

Mary Binney Wheeler didn't own or display her shark helmet in the South Pacific at the end of the 19th century, but the warrior shark helmet that served as a badge of honour and courage was displayed in the offices of the United States Army in Washington, D.C. In 1870, the Army purchased the helmet from the Kaaawa warriors of the South Pacific, who exchanged it as a gift for the services it had provided during the Penang War.

The Kaaawa warriors respected their military culture and traditions, and the shark helmet was an important symbol of their identity and heritage. It was a significant cultural artifact that represented their warrior culture and was part of their daily lives.

The story of the shark helmet is an example of the rich cultural heritage of the South Pacific, which is an essential part of the history and culture of the region.
